*Today,
a totally new Imperial is being built on October 4,
you can see it in our showroom*

On that day, we will introduce an automobile that will change your ideas of what a fine car should be. The totally new Imperial will be America's most spacious, most luxurious fine car. And it will be the quietest automobile ever produced. The Incomparable Imperial—a new concept in luxury cars. May we arrange an advance showing?

A new and vastly improved Cadillac for 1964 will soon be on display at your authorized dealer's. This newest version of the "car of cars" will bring to the fine-car field an entirely new concept of performance and comfort. The Cadillac car for 1964 will be, in every respect, a noteworthy successor to its famed 1963 model, which set an all-time record in luxury car popularity. Those who are contemplating the purchase of a fine car in 1964 will find the 1964 Cadillac rewarding far beyond their expectations. Your Cadillac dealer cordially invites you to be among the first to see—and even more importantly, to drive—the Cadillac car for 1964.

A black and white advertisement for Masson wine. The central focus is a hand holding a bottle of wine. From the neck of the bottle, a vertical column of bottle caps rises, appearing to float upwards. The caps are arranged in a straight line, creating a sense of height and continuity. The background is a plain, light-colored surface. The text 'Tonight could be the night!' is written in a serif font across the middle of the image. In the bottom left corner, there is a small logo of a person and the text 'PAUL MASSON VINEYARDS SARATOGA, CALIFORNIA'. The bottle label features the name 'Masson' in a large, stylized font, and below it, 'nally Ferment' and a logo with the letter 'M' inside a shield-like shape.

This is an appropriate time to express our gratitude to the man who has done so much to elevate and sustain the standards of the San Francisco Opera. Kurt Herbert Adler is now completing his first decade as head of the Company. During the ten years of his leadership, he has continued to exhibit the rare combination of qualities necessary for success in this most demanding field of endeavor. His artistic integrity, knowledge and skill, along with his exceptional administrative ability, have brought to the Company both freshness and maturity.

Ten seasons leave room for many highlights. From the glorious "Die Frau ohne Schatten" to the deeply moving "Wozzeck", from Verdi revivals of "Macbeth" and "Nabucco" to the premieres of such contemporary works as "Troilus and Cressida", the repertoire has shown the keen guidance which has mixed standard favorites with ventures into new fields to the enrichment of all our auditors. Many leading singers hold in high esteem the San Francisco Opera season and look forward with gratification to engagements with the Company. At the same time, Maestro Adler's judicious choice of new artists consistently enlivens each year's roster.

In short, as one leading European critic has remarked, "Kurt Herbert Adler has created a real theater in San Francisco that ranks with the greatest of international companies." Of Maestro Adler's directing genius, and the notable achievements it has wrought, we may all be justly proud.

The motorcar to listen to FM by

Let's begin with the seats. It's unlikely your home offers a more luxurious, comfortable, posture-perfect chair for listening to good music by. Then there is the question of acoustics. While our Lincoln Continental is no La Scala, it does provide an elegantly hushed environment for listening to faint oboes by. No distractions from engine, clock or other moving parts. Road and wind noises are locked out. Basic to all this is the AM-FM receiver that's available to give you an 88 to 108 megacycle FM band and three FM push-buttons, plus two AM settings. The set has 10 transistors and 7 diodes which help produce the finest fidelity (even under viaducts) of any radio put on wheels.

Of course, there are times when silence is golden. That's another place our Continental shines.  LINCOLN CONTINENTAL

TCHAIKOVSKY AND OPERA

Peter Ilyitch Tchaikovsky (1840-1893), the prolific composer of symphonic and orchestral works, chamber music, songs and ballets, devoted considerable effort to the composition of eleven operas. "Eugene Onegin" (1878) and "The Queen of Spades" (1890) are the best known of Tchaikovsky's operatic works. A few passages from the voluminous correspondence of the Russian composer reveal his feeling for the medium of opera.

On completing act I of his opera, "The Enchantress," Tchaikovsky wrote to his friend, Taneyev, "You are quite correct in regarding this insincere form of art (opera) with suspicion. But for a composer opera has an irresistible attraction. It alone . . . offers him a way to get in touch with the masses. Opera, and only opera, brings us closer to our fellow men, inoculates the public with our music, and makes it the possession, not of a small circle only, but—circumstances being favorable—of all peoples. I do not think that this tendency is to be condemned; that is, Schumann, when he composed "Genoveva" and Beethoven when he composed "Fidelio," were not actuated by ambition, but by a natural wish to enlarge the circle of their hearers and to penetrate as far as possible into the heart of humanity.

"As regards the lofty significance of symphonic and chamber music when compared with opera, let me add only that to abstain from composing operas is the work of a hero, and we have only one such hero in our time—Brahms. Cui has justly remarked in a recent article that Brahms, both as man and as artist, has followed only the highest ideals—those worthy of respect and admiration. Unfortunately, his creative gift is thin and does not correspond to his lofty aspirations. Nevertheless, he is a hero. This heroism is not in me, for the stage and all its glitter beckons me irresistibly."

* * * * *

In answer to criticisms of "Eugene Onegin," the composer wrote, "If it isn't theatrical, don't put it on and don't play it. I composed this opera because one beautiful day an inexpressively strong desire to set to music all that in Onegin cries out for music overwhelmed me . . . I worked with indescribable delight and enthusiasm, worrying little about motion, effects, etc. I don't give a fig for effects! What are they? If you find them in "Aida," I assure you that I couldn't compose an opera on such a subject for all the world's wealth, for I need people, not puppets. I should gladly undertake any opera that, though lacking strong and startling effects, contained human beings like myself who experience emotions I experience and understand."

* * * * *

Tchaikovsky prepared a colorful report on the opening of the Bayreuth festival, August 13, 1867 . . . "I met Liszt who received me most cordially. I called on Wagner, who no longer receives anyone. The village was in a furor. Mobs of people - native and foreign - come together from the ends of the earth, were rushing toward the railroad station to witness the emperor's arrival. First some brilliant uniforms passed by, then the musicians of the festspielhaus, in line, with the conductor Hans Richter at their head. Next followed the fascinating figure of the Abbe Liszt with the fine characteristic head I have so often admired in portraits. And lastly, in a sumptuous carriage, a serene old man - Richard Wagner - with his aquiline nose and the delicate, ironic smile that lends its characteristic expression to the face of the begetter of this cosmopolitan artistic festival. A rousing cheer resounded as the emperor's train entered the station. The crowds greeted Wagner with equal enthusiasm. What pride, what overflowing emotions must have welled up at this moment in the heart of that little man who, by his powerful determination and great talent, has defied all obstacles to the final realization of his artistic ideals and audacious beliefs!

"As a theatrical spectacle 'Das Rheingold' aroused my interest and charmed me by its wonderful staging. As music it is incredible nonsense, in the midst of which there are occasional flashes of extraordinary and amazing beauty."

Some days after the curtains had closed on the first "Götterdämmerung", he wrote, ("With the last chords . . . I felt as though I had been set free from captivity. Perhaps the Nibelungen is a great masterpiece, but it is certain that there never was anything more boring and long-drawn out than this spun-out composition." He went on to say amusingly that everyone he encountered seemed to be searching anxiously for something. That something, he discovered, was food. "As a matter of fact," he commented, "throughout the whole length of the festival, food formed the chief interest of the public. The artistic performances took second place. Chops, baked potatoes and omelettes were discussed much more eagerly than the music of Wagner."

* * * * *

Tchaikovsky had not begun with enthusiasm for the idea of "The Queen of Spades" as an opera, but with his brother Modeste's libretto approved by the theatrical authorities, his interest was rekindled. He completed the first scene in nine days. On January 31, having just begun work, he wrote in his diary, "Not bad, (the beginning is stolen from Naprapnik)." With few interruptions, he worked at the first sketch until March 15, writing Modeste on that date that he had completed the opera three hours before. He set to work the following day on the piano score which was finished on April 5. The orchestration was begun within a few days and was finished on June 5, the entire task having occupied one hundred and twenty-six days.

Referring to the scene in "The Queen of Spades" in which the countess dies, as Hermann points a pistol at her, Tchaikovsky wrote that while composing it he was terrified. Days later, he added, "I am still under the impress of this terror."

As the composer neared the completion of the piano score, he wrote to his brother, "Either I am terribly and inexcusably mistaken, or "The Queen of Spades" is really my chef-d'oeuvre. Some of the passages in the fourth scene, for example, on the arrangement of which I was working today, fill me with such fear, terror, and emotion that it is impossible that listeners should not feel at least part of this . . . I wrote the opera with complete forgetfulness of self and with delight; the orchestration will undoubtedly give me pleasure . . . It seems to me now that the history of the world is divided into two periods; the first consists of everything that has happened since the creation of the world up to the composition of The Queen of Spades . . ."

SAN FRANCISCO SAN RAFAEL SAN MATEO HILLSDALE OAKLAND HAYWARD SAN JOSE SACRAMENTO FRESNO

One of the highlights of the current San Francisco Opera season is the new production by Günther Rennert of Rossini's "Il Barbiere di Siviglia." The setting comprises a three-story house designed by Alfred Siercke and Thomas L. Colangelo, Jr. and constructed under the supervision of Pierre Cayard. The San Francisco Opera Guild donated the production to the Company and it will receive its last performance of the season at a Sunday matinee, 2:00 p.m., October 6, for which tickets are still available. On the next two pages are a number of costume sketches from this opera, the setting of which has been updated to the 1840's.

THE STORY OF "TOSCA"

ACT I—Angelotti, an escaped political prisoner takes refuge at the church of Sant' Andrea, hiding in a side chapel when he hears the Sacristan approach. Soon after Mario Cavaradossi also enters to continue work on his painting and when the Sacristan leaves Angelotti reveals himself to Mario, asking his aid. The two conspirators are interrupted by the beautiful singer, Tosca, who jealously accuses Mario of a secret alliance and insists that he has been meeting with a new love. Mario soothes her fears and she leaves promising to meet him that evening. He then offers to take Angelotti to a hiding place and the two depart as Scarpia and the police enter searching for the escaped prisoner. Scarpia quickly perceives that Cavaradossi has assisted the refugee, and contemplates a devious plan of revenge. When Tosca re-enters, Scarpia who has secretly resolved to win her himself, slyly insinuates that Mario has departed with his new love, and enraged the weeping Tosca departs.

ACT II—Scarpia, having arrested Cavaradossi, is holding him prisoner in an attempt to make him disclose Angelotti's whereabouts. Tosca, summoned by Scarpia, enters, and finding Mario incarcerated determines to see him freed. In an attempt to obtain his release Tosca reveals Angelotti's hiding place, but Scarpia informs her that his price for Cavaradossi's freedom is herself. Horrified, but with no alternative, Tosca agrees and the triumphant Scarpia writes the order for Mario's supposedly mock execution and safe conduct. Meanwhile having noticed a sharp knife on the table, the distraught Tosca takes it, and when Scarpia approaches her she stabs him. Then, snatching the order from the dead man's hand and placing candles at either side of his body and a crucifix on his chest, she flees.

ACT III—Mario and the execution party approach the scaffold where he is to be executed within the hour. Left alone for his last few moments, he is lost in memories of Tosca when she enters to inform him of his freedom. Explaining the events of the past evening she tells him that after the mock execution they can flee the city. At that moment the firing squad arrives to perform Scarpia's final bit of treachery. Upon their departure, and when Mario fails to arise at her urgings, Tosca realizes that she has been the victim of a grim ruse. Grief-stricken she leaps from the parapet to her death, just as the police try to apprehend her for Scarpia's murder.

THE STORY OF "IL BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA"

ACT I—With his band of hired musicians, Count Almaviva comes at dawn to serenade Rosina outside the house of her guardian, Dr. Bartolo, who keeps her a virtual prisoner in the hopes of marrying her himself. Almaviva dismisses the musicians when Rosina does not appear, but lingers near the house. The barber Figaro arrives and describes his busy life. The count asks him to arrange a meeting with Rosina, adding that his identity must not be known for he does not wish her to be influenced by the glamour of his rank. Suddenly Rosina appears on her balcony and at the same moment Dr. Bartolo joins her. The count and Figaro hide under the balcony and, in front of Dr. Bartolo's eyes, Rosina manages to drop a note to the count. Almaviva sings a second serenade telling Rosina that he is Lindoro, a poor creature who can offer her nothing but love. The count and Figaro continue their planning. Troops are coming to the city, and it is decided that Almaviva, disguised as a drunken officer, must arrange to be billeted with Bartolo. Dr. Bartolo goes to arrange his affairs with the notary.

ACT II—Rosina, alone in the house, expresses her spirited nature. Bartolo returns and is soon visited by Don Basilio, the music teacher, who informs him that Count Almaviva has been haunting the neighborhood, and both presume that he is the mysterious serenader. Basilio suggests that they start a disgraceful rumour which will make Rosina reject the count. Figaro overhears their plan and returns to warn Rosina of the doctor's intention to marry her, and leaves with a note from her to Lindoro. Dr. Bartolo suspects that Figaro may be carrying notes between his ward and her admirer but is frustrated by Rosina in his attempts to gain the truth. Later the count enters in his disguise. The old doctor suspiciously resists the order for the quartering of soldiers. During the confusion which the count creates in the Bartolo household, he manages to slip a note to Rosina. Soon soldiers arrive to arrest the offender, but immediately release him when the count secretly reveals his identity to the officer.

ACT III—The doctor, wondering if the drunken soldier may not be an emissary of Count Almaviva, is interrupted by a stranger, none other than the count himself disguised as a music teacher. He explains that Basilio is ill and that he has come in his place to give Rosina a music lesson. Figaro arrives and to assure the young people a moment together, insists on shaving the doctor who will not leave the room. His face is covered with lather when Basilio appears in perfect health. He is convinced by the disguised count that he is really not well and is rushed out of the house. Bartolo's suspicions are once again aroused and he tells Rosina that Lindoro intends to arrange a marriage between her and Count Almaviva. As night falls, the count (Lindoro) accompanied by Figaro places a ladder against Rosina's balcony as they had earlier planned for their elopement. Rosina, believing the slanderous tales about her suitor, refuses to go with them. The count then reveals his identity and they make ready to depart. As they go for the ladder, they discover Ambrosio, Bartolo's servant, has taken it away. At the same moment, Don Basilio and the Notary arrive prepared to marry Dr. Bartolo to his ward. Instead, Figaro and the count persuade him to be a witness to the marriage of the count and Rosina. Dr. Bartolo arriving too late to stop the wedding, decides to accept his misfortune gracefully. The count, the countess and others depart for the wedding feast.

A warning gong will be sounded in the foyers six minutes before the end of each intermission. A buzzer will signal the end of the intermission.

SOME PRACTICAL ASPECTS OF THE CURRENT SEASON

The San Francisco Opera, founded in 1922, today stands in the first rank of the world's opera companies along with those of New York, Milan, Vienna, and the cultural centers of Germany. Yet our Company offers a far shorter season than the major opera organizations of New York and Europe.

A primary obligation of the San Francisco Opera is to meet the growing demand for fine opera in San Francisco. Toward this end, the local season has been extended from six to seven weeks this year and the number of performances increased from 30 to 36. This means that the Company will be presenting more opera to more people at a proportionately lower cost of production. Although budgeted expenses are up 17% over last year, a greater number of repeat performances will reduce our average deficit per performance after the added box office income, thereby accomplishing a more efficient use of staff and artists.

Nevertheless, the overall loss will be somewhat higher than before, due largely to the steadily rising cost of labor. While many business and industrial concerns have been able to cut costs, or boost production, through various labor saving devices, no machines have yet been developed that can sing, act, direct, dance, conduct, design and tend to the hundreds of other production jobs that call for a high degree of individual skill and talent. Because opera production is 95% labor, our costs have increased at a much greater rate than business expenses in general.

In 1947, our total expenses were $728,842, with gross operating income at $649,616. In 1962, expenses had reached $1,672,525 against a gross operating income of $1,345,920.

So, despite strict and relentless economies of operation, despite sell-outs for almost every performance, despite the fact that we are closer to being self-supporting than any other major opera organization (ticket proceeds cover from 80-85% of expenses), the San Francisco Opera this year must raise $8,128 more than in 1962. The 1963 goal is $160,000.*

Thanks to the financial support from our guarantors and an increasing number of donors, the San Francisco Opera has, so far, survived the cost squeeze of recent years. To maintain our present artistic level, we will need the continued assistance of past contributors. At the same time, we must continue to develop new and additional support from individuals, businesses, foundations and local government.

Only by constantly striving to better our previous performance, in fund raising as well as staging, can we keep grand opera alive and growing in San Francisco.

EVERY DONATION DOES A JOB

Helping to offset the annual San Francisco Opera deficit is the responsibility of everyone who values fine opera.

As costs increase, the Company must depend on increasing support in its annual fund drive. The goal this year is $160,000, and to reach it we need many more donations than we received in 1962.

If you have not given before, the San Francisco Opera Association urges you to do so at this time. Your tax-deductible contribution, whatever the amount, will help to do a specific and vital job. A few examples are given on this page.

Checks may be sent to the War Memorial Opera House, San Francisco 2.

IRISH coffee

After the last curtain call... meet for a traditional Irish Coffee at the Buena Vista. There is only one proper blending of Irish Whiskey, coffee, cream and sugar for the exquisite flavor of this warm and friendly drink... the result at the Buena Vista is perfection.

leading man

He takes the lead wherever he goes—the business world, the sports arena, the social circle. One good reason: His store is Bullock & Jones. He wears only Walter Morton clothes—superior fabrics, expertly tailored, exclusive at Bullock & Jones. He chooses Cavanagh hats from Bullock & Jones' extensive selection of styles and sizes to suit every individual profile. And his accessories all have the distinctive look found only at Bullock & Jones.

"What's an inheritance tax?"

Children ask the darndest questions. And it's harder than ever to find the answers. Take today's complicated tax laws. Did you know that an estate may be taxed three times in passing from husband to wife to child to grandchild? Using a trust, it may be taxed only once. The difference is your family's future. That's the basic job of a trust department — to conserve and protect your assets. In your personal planning, consult your attorney, and then talk with a Wells Fargo Trust Officer.
