CARTIER. THE ART OF BEING UNIQUE

CARTIER...FOR 140 YEARS UNITING LEGEND WITH REALITY. A HISTORY SO RICH IN CREATIVITY AND ACHIEVEMENT THAT IT HAS CHANGED THE VERY COURSE OF THE JEWELERS ART. GENERATIONS OF DEDICATED AND TALENTED DESIGNERS, WORKING WITH THE NOBLEST OF EARTH'S TREASURES, HAVE TRANSFORMED DIAMONDS AND PRECIOUS METALS INTO OBJECTS OF RARE BEAUTY AND FANTASY. LIKE POETS OR MAGICIANS, CARTIER CREATORS KNOW THE WONDER OF DREAMS AND THE MYSTERY OF DESIRE. AND LIKE THOSE MASTERS OF IMAGINATION, THE CARTIER ARTISTS INTERPRET THOSE DREAMS AND DESIRES FOR A CLIENTELE WHICH, LIKE CARTIER ITSELF, IS UNIQUE IN ALL THE WORLD.

Attention to Detail.

There's a big difference between a house and a classic. A difference far greater than simply having withstood the test of time. It is a matter of substance. Of proportion. And more than anything else, attention to detail.

Since 1919, McGuire Real Estate has been a major force in San Francisco real estate. With 100 full time agents, we not only list the finest properties, but the McGuire family includes a network of San Francisco's most able buyers.

In fact, according to information gathered from the San Francisco Association of Realtors*, McGuire was involved in nearly twice as many transactions involving prime properties than our nearest competitor.

If you are about to list or purchase a home, that's the kind of detail to which you should pay serious attention.

THE NEW BMW 3-SERIES. ENGINEERED TO PUT MORE DISTANCE BETWEEN YOU AND YOUR MECHANIC.

Picture yourself on the road of your choice, far, far away. Miles from your office. And home. And nearest hydraulic lift.

Because with the dramatically new 325i, BMW has literally stretched the time between servicings—by stretching the very possibilities of internal combustion.

A formidable feat accomplished, in part, by a computerized engine management system that constantly adjusts ignition timing and fuel flow for optimum performance.

By tappets that automatically fine-tune themselves. Which means the valves never need to be re-synchronized.

And by a direct ignition system that has totally eliminated the need for a distributor.

In short, a car whose 189-horsepower, 24-valve, 6-cylinder engine requires no valve, timing or belt adjustments during regularly scheduled maintenance. Just the periodic changing of oil, filters and plugs.

A simple routine which could end up saving you a tidy sum in parts and labor.

Of course, the new 3-Series could also save you unexpected expenses, as well. Backed, as it is, by a 4-year/50,000-mile bumper-to-bumper warranty* and by BMW's nationwide Roadside Assistance.

So, if the thought of owning such a car intrigues you, we invite you to visit your nearest authorized BMW dealer.

After all, we think a driver's time is far better spent out on the road, than in a service garage waiting lounge.

SOHL

From the President and the Chairman of the Board

Welcome to our 69th Fall Season! This is a wonderful season our general director has planned, and aside from the excitement of new repertoire and artists that distinguish our fall schedule, we have other reasons to celebrate as well.

This year we have seen our subscription base grow–it is up nearly five percent over last year's total. That this could happen in a year when a general recession has taken its toll in almost every sector of the economy, is genuinely heartening to us. Our loyal subscribers are the bedrock on which the Company is based, and we shall continue to do all we can to keep you enthusiastic and happy.

We are also delighted to see the new leadership role being taken by various corporations in helping us to cover the staggeringly enormous costs of producing grand opera in the style to which our audiences have become accustomed. Three organizations have earned special recognition: Lexus, a division of Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc., is the Official Automotive Sponsor of San Francisco Opera; Delta Air Lines, Inc., has become the Official Airline of San Francisco Opera; and R. Kassman Pianos has continued to provide us with high-quality Kawai pianos, the Official Piano of San Francisco Opera.

Lexus, which has had an on-going sponsor relationship with San Francisco Opera since they underwrote our 1989 presentation of the Kirov Ballet, is also sponsoring this year's Opening Night performance of La Traviata. Our new production of Prokofiev's monumental War and Peace has been underwritten by a major grant from the Columbia Foundation, the Paul L. and Phyllis C. Wattis Foundation and a generous gift from Cynthia Wood. We are all tremendously excited by this major Company premiere, and are deeply grateful to these generous benefactors.

Other individuals and private foundations have also given generously: our Company premiere production of Bellini's I Capuleti e i Montecchi was made possible by a major gift from Herman J. Miller and Edward J. Clark; our newly refurbished Don Giovanni has been underwritten by a gift from the Bernard Osher Foundation; we gratefully acknowledge the L.J. Skaggs and Mary C. Skaggs Foundation for underwriting our new mounting of Tristan und Isolde; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Tilton for our first presentation of Attila; and the American premiere of Henze's Das Verratene Meer is taking place here through the generosity of the Paul L. and Phyllis C. Wattis Foundation. It is thanks to individuals, foundations and corporations such as these that an adventurous season of opera can be realized, and we are all in their debt.

We would also like once again to acknowledge our governmental funding sources, including the National Endowment for the Arts, the California Arts Council and the Grants for the Arts program of the San Francisco Hotel Tax Fund. We also extend our appreciation to Mayor Art Agnos and Chief Administrative Officer Rudolf Nothenberg, whose continued support has been most gratifying. And of course, we wish to express our thanks for the ongoing support of the Opera Guild and the War Memorial Board of Trustees.

General Director's Message

I am always delighted to welcome you to a new season of San Francisco Opera, but this year I am particularly so. This is the first season for which I have planned all of the elements, and I feel justifiably proud of what we have to offer you.

First of all, an opera that is especially dear to my heart — our Company premiere of Prokofiev's epic War and Peace, a project that for me is a dream come true. When I first accepted the appointment as San Francisco Opera's fourth general director, I immediately expressed my desire to mount this important masterpiece, and this year happily coincides with the centennial of the composer's birth. It is also the first Prokofiev opera ever presented by San Francisco Opera.

Another milestone event is a major American premiere of Hans Werner Henze's gripping music drama, Das Verratene Meer, based on Yukio Mishima's acclaimed novel The Sailor Who Fell From Grace With the Sea. We are honored to be the first American opera company to present this major musical event, and I am even more pleased to be able to announce that the composer will be here for this auspicious premiere.

For aficionados of bel canto, we are offering our Company premiere of Bellini's ravishing setting of the Romeo and Juliet story, I Capuleti e i Montecchi; and our first performances ever of Verdi's Attila will be heartily welcomed by fans of Giuseppe Verdi as well as those of Samuel Ramey — a very large group, indeed.

Several familiar operas will be seen in productions new to San Francisco Opera: the transcendent passion of Wagner's Tristan und Isolde, and the shattering drama of Elektra by Richard Strauss. Mozart's masterpiece Don Giovanni will be seen in a reworking of our own production, and we will bring back two of our most lavish stage spectacles, our productions of Verdi's La Traviata and Bizet's Carmen.

With so much that is new happening this fall, I don't even have room to begin listing the spectacular artists who will be making their debuts, and the favorite stars who will be returning to our stage. Perhaps even more important are the numbers of you, our devoted audience, who are returning to the War Memorial. We have an exciting season of discovery ahead of us; it is your participation that makes it all complete.

Enjoy the season!

THE TRISTAN CHORD

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

SCHERL

MORTON

An attractive widower, not yet old, but no longer young, is wooed by a passionate, unsettled girl, not yet a grownup, but no longer a child. No, he says, no, he knows a sad play about Tristan and Isolde, and he wants no part of the fate of King Marke. And as he speaks, the orchestra stabs us—quietly, but to the heart—with a chord unlike any we have heard in the three hours of music through which the story has unfolded so far.

A teen-age boy, pathetic, repressed, afraid, is slipped his first drink by two friends who count on a jigger of rum to be the key to his liberation. As the mysterious and unfamiliar essence invades his head, the same chord fills the orchestra like spreading smoke.

In a tour de force of musical cryptography, a string quartet becomes a love letter to a woman whose place in the composer's heart none must guess. Suddenly, in the lamenting finale, the four strands of sound sort themselves out into that chord.

In a carol to "lovely and soothing Death," when poet and musician the chord ghosts for a moment through the room.

It is the first chord of Tristan und Isolde. It is also Wagner, quoting himself in the third act of Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg; Benjamin Britten, injecting it into the comedy of poor Albert Herring's coronation as Albert the Good; Alban Berg, setting it as a secret reference in the Lyric Suite he wrote for Hannah Fuchs-Robettin; and Roger Sessions, reticently alluding to it in his setting of Walt Whitman's threnody for Abraham Lincoln, When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloom'd. All four composers could be sure that they were making a reference that would be understood instantly and unmistakably.

The Tristan Chord

Musicians—and not only musicians—know it as "the Tristan chord." Is there another composition so identified with a single sound? The historians discovered that Wagner got it, like so much else, from Franz Liszt. The point, however, is that Wagner perceived that what had been a colorful detail in a song by his future father-in-law could become the motor, the heartbeat, of a drama more intense, more erotic, more abstract, more involved intellectually, more allusive, than anything that had ever before been set on a stage.

The Tristan story, as Wagner distilled it from many strands of legend and literature, is nearly devoid of external event. A man and a woman drain a cup of drugged wine, a hunting party returns unexpectedly early, and twice, tempers and ideals collide so that a physical melee erupts briefly. But those are mere mechanisms in and of the real story, which is one of two people caught in hopeless love. Perhaps "hopeless" is by one degree too extreme a word; for what Tristan and Isolde come to realize is that there is indeed one place where their love can find fulfillment, their great yearning can be stilled. That is the Land of Death.

For this story, so plain and so baffling if we imagine dealing with it by means of ordinary stagecraft, Wagner found a stunningly simple musical metaphor. He constructed a network of dissonance whose resolution into consonance would come about only at the moment when Tristan and Isolde are joined in death. (Dissonance, I should perhaps add, is not synonymous with discord; rather, it is, in tonal harmony, the term for any chord that sets up the expectation or need of resolution to another, more stable chord.)

Here is how Tristan begins. "Slow and yearning," writes Wagner, and the cellos, pianissimo, heave themselves up from A to F, there to begin a slow, gradual descent. On the third note of that descent, a few woodwinds add their voices to produce that poignant and aromatic dissonance, the Tristan chord. Wagner treats it as a dissonance, as a sound that wants to move on to another sound. He does not, however, resolve it into consonance. The voices fan out until they reach that most familiar and most restless of dissonances, the one known in the trade as the dominant seventh chord.

Our expectation, when we hear a dominant seventh, is that it will lead to a consonance. This particular chord would normally resolve to a chord of A minor. Instead, Wagner lets it dissolve into silence. Then, after a pause that few conductors have the nerve, patience, and sense of rhythm to hold through its proper duration, he begins the whole process again, a step higher. He repeats the phrase a third time, still more intensely, and this time the prolongation of the "dying" by means of ever more tenuous repetitions of ever shorter fragments serves notice that the expected resolution will not come, at least not yet. The prelude to Tristan und Isolde touches many chords and with many degrees of emphasis, but the one thing Wagner studiously avoids is anything like settling on a chord of his unstated tonic or home key.

Wagner was working long past the time when an opera overture was simply a pleasant bustle designed to cover the noise of an audience settling down. Almost from the beginning of his career, he begins his dramas from the first note of music. As for Tristan, we know well what is coming even if our acquaintance is limited to the popular concert pairing of Prelude and "Love-Death," an expedient authorized and practiced by Wagner himself at a time when opportunities to see a complete Tristan were probably less plentiful than chances of seeing Schoenberg's Moses und Aron in the theater today. But even the first audience in Munich on June 10, 1865 must have perceived that a musical gesture so striking in itself and presented with so many marks of emphasis was bound to have consequences. Chekhov says somewhere that if you see a gun hanging on a wall in Act One, someone will fire it in Act Three.

No doubt someone has counted how many times the Tristan chord appears, literally, or in some inversion, transposition, or other recognizable variant, between measure two of the Prelude and the moment, hours later, when Isolde has sunk "as though transfigured," lifeless, into the arms of her maid, Brangäne, and onto the body of the dead Tristan. (By the way, Wagner's own title for what we now call Prelude and "Love-Death" was "Love-Death and Transfiguration.") I, at any rate, have not done a chord-count, but the number must be well into three figures. Tristan und Isolde is a wondrously multifaceted work, and no one analytical approach will serve to reveal all of its nature. You could certainly do worse, though, than to trace the unfolding of its events than through the appearance of the chord.

Claude Debussy, another composer who was both so haunted by Tristan that he became nearly paralyzed in his effort to compose Pelléas et Mélisande and who also quoted the famous chord for humorous effect, was a wonderful writer about music, and, like all good critics, he was not always innocent of hyperbole and distortion. He was conspicuously unkind—and untruthful—when he complained of the behavior of Wagner's leitmotifs. The characters were tiresome, he remarked, the way they insisted on presenting their calling cards monotonously upon each appearance. At best this is partially true of early Wagner and of a few special cases like the trumpet call associated in Der Ring des Nibelungen with the sword Nothung.

Wagner in fact realized quite soon that these leitmotifs, as well as being telling associative devices, were wonderfully pliable musical entities with which he could build his unprecedentedly far-flung structures. He cared intensely about the firmness of his designs, and it was to Beethoven that he turned in order to learn how to achieve that firmness. It is not surprising to discover that the C-sharp minor String Quartet, Opus 131, so big, so multiform, and at the same time so compacted and rich in cross-reference and allusion, was the Beethoven work that, together with the Ninth Symphony, he most treasured.

Tristan und Isolde abounds in significant recapitulations of its opening measures, and their function in the matter of form is as crucial as their affective weight. Walter Pater's definition of form as the life history of an idea comes urgently to mind. By the same token, the span from the second measure of the prelude to the fifth measure from the end of Act Three is the great crossbeam that holds the immense edifice together.

This is not the place to write the biography of that chord whose sound and further resonance so saturate Tristan und Isolde. Who, anyway, would not ultimately want to make that voyage of discovery independently, to let the drama reveal its riches in

S.F. PALM GALLERY FEATURES EXHIBITION ON EARLY CALIFORNIA OPERA FAY-YEN-FAH

What was the first grand opera written by Americans to be produced outside this country? What American opera stopped traffic in San Francisco in 1926? What 1920s Californian was the first American dancer to partner Anna Pavlova? What flamboyant Berkeley graduate played opposite Greta Garbo and made one of the first movies set in the ballet world?

The answers to these questions will be found in "Theatrical Splendor," an exhibition documenting a little-known but fascinating chapter in California's musical history. Presented by the San Francisco Performing Arts Library & Museum (SF PALM), the display chronicles the creation of the opera Fay-Yen-Fah, and the life and work of Hubert Julian Stowitts (1892-1953), who designed the original sets and costumes.

Fay-Yen-Fah was a grand opera set in legendary China, with music by California composer Joseph Redding and libretto by Templeton Crocker, grandson of California railroad and banking magnate Charles Crocker. The opera, which began life in 1917 as a Bohemian Club presentation called The Land of Happiness, was one of the very first West Coast operas, and was indeed touted as the earliest opera composed and written by Americans. Choreographed by a very young George Balanchine, and conducted by Victor de Sabata, the opera had its premiere in Monte Carlo in 1925, and was revived there in 1932. The American premiere took place in San Francisco on January 11, 1926 at the Columbia Theater, conducted by Gaetano Merola, founder of the San Francisco Opera.

The exhibition, featuring a rarely-seen portfolio of 34 diachromie lithographs, depicting the sumptuous costume designs commissioned by Crocker and created by Hubert Julian Stowitts, runs from September 20 to January 3rd at the SF PALM Gallery, 399 Grove Street, San Francisco. Gallery hours are Monday and Friday, noon-5 p.m. and Tuesday through Thursday, noon-6 p.m. Saturday hours will be instituted in early October; visitors may call for complete information.

There will be a lecture by Guest Curator Anne Holliday on "The Life and Adventures of Hubert Julian Stowitts," on Tuesday, October 22, at 6:00 p.m. at SF PALM. For further information call (415) 255-4800.

the theater, at the piano, on records, through some form of long living with it? But let me, by way of example, point to just a few such moments.

The drinking of the potion:

This, near the end of Act One, is the first great peripeteia of the drama. It sets in motion what we think of as the "real" action, but it also closes the chapter begun years before when Tristan slew Isolde's betrothed, Morold. It is the most explicit recapitulation of the opening to be found in the score, but, at the same time, how transformed it is! The chord itself enters as a cry of the whole orchestra. What were the long silences in the prelude are now filled with sounds that speak of racing pulses, of trembling and vertigo and confusion. And the phrase in which the prelude attains its real momentum is transfigured when Tristan and Isolde for the first time address each other by name. Can our hearing, our understanding of the prelude ever be the same once we have heard Isolde's shaken "Tristan!" and Tristan's passion-flooded response?

Tristan's response to King Marke:

Day has invaded night, the outer world has intruded into that world that excludes all but Tristan and Isolde. To King Marke, crushed by grief, incomprehension, and shame, Tristan can say only: "O King, I cannot tell you, and what you ask, you can never learn." As he speaks, the music of the prelude's opening bars sounds again, but in the chill sonorities of wind instruments, and with a subtle change of harmony that substitutes for the dominant seventh with its openness, tension, and expectation, a sound that musicians know as the six-four chord, also unstable, unfinal, but without energy or life.

Only when Tristan turns from Marke to Isolde do we again hear the warm sound of strings.

Tristan's death:

An event passionately longed for and with equal passion staved off until the arrival of Isolde. As Tristan sinks slowly to the ground in Isolde's arms, the music of the prelude sounds again, first urgently telescoped, then, with his last "Isolde!" disintegrating into silence.

Isolde's death:

The Love-Death is a massive recapitulation of the climax of the love music in Act Two. As Isolde expires, the chord—for the first and only time—is dissolved in beatific consonance. The drama is over. Tristan and Isolde have found death and thus each other. The chord has found its resolution.

GALLOWAY

I have wondered sometimes how many in the audience at the first performance of Die Meistersinger caught the musical quotation that went with the reference to the "traurig Stück" of Tristan und Isolde. (In the pit that night was Hans von Bülow, an expert on cuckoldry: his wife had borne the first of her three children by Richard Wagner on the day of the first orchestral rehearsal of Tristan.) No doubt to some extent Wagner was writing into the future. It is silly to ask what Wagner would have thought of Alban Berg or Roger Sessions, though I can imagine that he might have approved of the seriousness of purpose behind their Tristan quotations. Of course when it came to humor he had a clear-cut and simple idea that the proper distribution of responsibilities was for him to make the jokes and for others to laugh. But perhaps he would have accepted even Albert Herring's hiccupy coronation insofar as it was evidence that, in one chord, he had created a totem so powerful that the briefest evocation of it could conjure, more than a thousand words, a world of magic and love and death. ❑

HOWARD

Wagner's Fluids

By SUSAN SONTAG

Richard Wagner, 1813 - 1883.

Water, blood, healing balm, magic potions—fluids play a decisive role in this mythology.

Wagner's stories are often launched from a water-world. An arrival by water and a departure by water frame the plots of The Flying Dutchman and Lohengrin. The Ring saga begins literally in the water, below the river Rhine's surface (to end, four operas later, with a cosmic duet of water and fire). Wagner's most delirious exploration of fluidity, Tristan und Isolde, begins and ends with journeys over water. Act I takes place on a noble vessel commanded by Tristan that is taking the Irish princess Isolde, who is affianced to Tristan's uncle, King Marke, to Cornwall. Preceding this journey was an earlier sea voyage, when Tristan, grievously wounded, had set off alone in a frail skiff for Ireland, in hope of being ministered to by Isolde, renowned for her healing arts. Since the foe who wounded him and whom he killed was Isolde's fiancé, he could not say who he was. (Solitary people with mysterious or disguised identities—Lohengrin, the Dutchman, the wounded Tristan at the Irish court—usually arrive by water.) Act III takes place on a rampart overlooking the sea, where Tristan, re-wounded mortally at the end of Act II, waits for a boat to arrive bearing Isolde, who has been summoned not as his lover but as his once successful healer. But as she appears Tristan dies, and she follows him in death. Journeys over water are associated in Wagner's mythology with a redemption that does not happen, as in Lohengrin, or happens in terms other than those originally sought, as in Tristan und Isolde, which has almost everybody die, either senselessly or beatifically.

Parsifal, like Tristan und Isolde, is very much a story of fluids. However, in this last of Wagner's thirteen operas, what is defined as redemption—finding someone who will heal, and succeed, the wounded king Amfortas—does take place, and in the hoped-for terms. A virgin, this time male, a holy fool, does appear. Perhaps this fulfillment of expectations makes it inevitable that the water-world is largely excluded from the opera. A majestic outdoors, the forest, and a vast sanctified indoors, the Grail Hall, are its two positive locations (the negative ones, Klingsor's domain, being a castle tower and a garden of dangerous flowers). To be sure, Act I has water just offstage: a lake to which the wounded king is brought for his hydrotherapy, and a spring where Kundry procures water to revive the fainting Parsifal after brutally announcing to him his mother's death; and in Act III, there is water for a consecration, for a baptism. But the main story of fluids is about blood ... the unstanchable hemorrhaging of the wound in Amfortas's side, Christ's blood that should stream in the Grail chalice. Amfortas's essential duty as king of the Grail knights, which is to make Christ's blood appear in the chalice on a regular basis, for the knights' eucharistic meal, has become agony for him to perform—weakened as he is by the wound, inflicted by Klingsor with the very spear that pierced Jesus' side while He hung on the Cross. The plot of Parsifal could be summarized as the search, eventually successful, for a replacement for someone who is having trouble making a fluid appear.

Several kinds of fluid enter the body in Wagner's stories but in only one form does fluid leave it, blood, and this in male bodies only. Women have bloodless deaths: usually they simply expire, abruptly (Elsa, Elisabeth, Isolde, Kundry) or they immolate themselves, in water (Senta) or in fire (Brünnhilde). Only men bleed ... bleed to death. (Therefore it doesn't seem too fanciful to regard semen as subsumed, metaphorically, under blood.) Though Wagner makes the prostrate, punctured, hemorrhaging male body the result of some epic combat, there is usually an erotic wound behind the one inflicted by spear and sword. Love as experienced by men, in both Tristan und Isolde and Parsifal, is tantamount to a wound. Isolde had healed Tristan but Tristan had fallen in love with Isolde; Wagner's way of signaling the emotional necessity of a new physical wound is to make it, shockingly, virtually self-inflicted. (Tristan drops his sword at the end of Act II and lets the treacherous Melot run him through.) Amfortas had already been seduced by Kundry; Klingsor's spear just made that wound literal.

In Wagner's misogynistic logic a woman, who characteristically doubles as healer and seducer, is often the true slayer. This figure, of whom Isolde is a positive version, appears in Parsifal with both the negativity and the eroticism made far more explicit. The person who flies in, early in Act I, bearing a vial of precious medicinal balm for the stricken king—it can relieve but not cure him—is the same person who caused the king's wound. Wagner makes Kundry systematically dual: in her service role, a bringer of fluids; in her seducer's alter ego, a taker of them.

Seduction is eloquence; service is mute. After the failure of Kundry's maximal eloquence, her attempt to seduce Parsifal in Act II, she is represented as having nothing left to say. "Dienen! Dienen!" ("To serve! To serve!") are the only words she is allowed in all of Act III. In contrast, Isolde, who is characterized first as a healing woman, one who successfully administered balm (the background of the opera's story), and then as a focus of desire, becomes more and more eloquent. It is with Isolde's rush of ecstatic words that Wagner concludes the opera.

The fluid administered by Isolde in her role as healer is in the past. In the story Wagner has chosen to tell, the fluid she offers Tristan is what they both believe to be a lethal poison. Instead, it is a de-inhibitor, which makes them—just as the boat is about to land—confess their love for each other.

GABRIELE SCHNAUT

One of the leading dramatic sopranos today, Gabriele Schnaut makes her U.S. opera debut as Isolde in Tristan und Isolde, a role in which she has been acclaimed in Dortmund, Cologne, Tokyo, and at the Hamburg State Opera. She began her musical career as a violinist, but switched to vocal studies at the Frankfurt Musikhochschule as a student of Elsa Cavelti. After graduation in 1976, she was immediately engaged at the Stuttgart Opera where she began her operatic career as a mezzo-soprano. She made her Bayreuth Festival debut the following year as Waltraute and the Second Norn in Patrice Chéreau's much-discussed production of Der Ring des Nibelungen, and has since been a regular guest at the Festival: as Venus in Wolfgang Wagner's production of Tannhäuser, as the Third Norn and Sieglinde in Peter Hall's staging of the Ring, and as Ortrud in Werner Herzog's production of Lohengrin. In subsequent seasons she sang regularly in Darmstadt, and later expanded her repertoire in Mannheim, where her roles included Kundry in Parsifal, Sieglinde in Die Walküre and Marie in Wozzeck. 1985 marked her initial assignment as a soprano: her first Isolde in concert in Dortmund, which was followed by successes in the role in Cologne (1987), in Ruth Berghaus's new production at the Hamburg State Opera (1988), and in Tokyo last year. Miss Schnaut is also well acquainted with 20th century music. The German composer Wolfgang Rihm has written the role of Ophelia in his opera Hamletmaschine specifically for her, as well as a cycle of seven Lieder for Orchestra. Compositions by Aribert Reimann, the early Hindemith operas, and Schreker's Der Schatzgräber and Der ferne Klang, which she has recorded with Gerd Albrecht, also belong to her repertoire. Outside of Germany, she was acclaimed as Ortrud and Sieglinde at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, as Kundry in Paris and Rome, and in her U.S. concert debut (as a mezzo) with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra led by Georg Solti. Recent highlights include the three Brünnhildes in a new Ring cycle which is being jointly presented by the opera houses of Cologne and Düsseldorf, as well as Els in Der Schatzgräber in Hamburg. Miss Schnaut recently recorded the role of Leonore in Fidelio with the Vienna Philharmonic led by Christoph von Dohnányi, and will sing the title role of Elektra for the first time in her career at the Opéra de Bastille in Paris next year.

German mezzo-soprano Hanna Schwarz, seen here last fall as Clairon in Capriccio and Prince Orlofsky in Die Fledermaus, appears this season as Brangäne in Tristan und Isolde. She made her U.S. debut with San Francisco Opera in 1977 as Fricka in Das Rheingold, returning to the War Memorial stage in the same role in the Summer of 1983 and in the 1985 Ring cycle, as well as Erda in Siegfried. She has also appeared with the Company as Octavian in Der Rosenkavalier in 1978, and in the title role of Carmen in 1981. The Hamburg-born singer, a leading artist at the Hamburg Opera since 1983, made her Bayreuth debut in 1975 and sang each year in the Chéreau Ring production, telecast in the U.S. in 1983. She also appeared in a film version of Tristan und Isolde as Brangäne, which was directed by Jean-Pierre Ponnelle, and portrayed Fricka and Waltraute in the Bayreuth 1985 Ring directed by Peter Hall. Miss Schwarz has been praised in Munich as the Principessa in Adriana Lecouvreur (a production which has been recorded); at the Metropolitan Opera as Fricka; at the Vienna Staatsoper as Octavian; and at the Hamburg Opera as Brangäne. Her discography includes numerous recordings of complete operas, lieder and concerts led by such conductors as Claudio Abbado, Pierre Boulez, Colin Davis, Herbert von Karajan, and Wolfgang Sawallisch. Recent engagements include Fricka in the Cologne Opera's complete (1989/90/91) Ring of the Nibelung, Erda in Munich's complete Ring cycle, and performances of Die Frau ohne Schatten in Bonn. Later this season she is scheduled for a new production of Orpheus und Eurydike in Bonn.

Internationally acclaimed tenor William Johns sings the role of Tristan in Tristan und Isolde. At the San Francisco Opera he has been heard as Walther in Die Meistersinger (1981), Don José in Carmen (1983), Max in Der Freischütz (1985), the Emperor in Die Frau ohne Schatten (1989) and, at last summer's Ring cycle, in the title role of Siegfried as well as Siegfried in Götterdämmerung. The Oklahoma-born artist's 1973 operatic debut as Rodolfo in La Bohème in Bremen was followed by appearances in other major European houses. He made his U.S. debut in the same role in 1975 with Pittsburgh Opera. He has since appeared as a regular guest artist at the leading opera houses of the world. Highlights of recent seasons include his debut at Milan's La Scala as the Emperor in a new production of Die Frau ohne Schatten; his first staged Tannhäuser at the Metropolitan Opera; his first Siegfried in Der Ring des Nibelungen in Paris; the first Tristan of his career opposite Gwyneth Jones at the Paris Opera; and Die Meistersinger at the Bayreuth Festival. Johns was heard in three new productions of Tristan und Isolde during the 1987-88 season: at the Hamburg State Opera, the Canadian Opera Company, and at the Los Angeles Opera. That same season he sang Siegfried at the Orange Festival, in addition to Bacchus in Toronto and the title role of Otello in Marseilles and Frankfurt. Most recently he appeared in Siegfried and Götterdämmerung at the Met and the Cologne Opera; Tannhäuser in Vienna, Hamburg and Bonn; Lohengrin, Rienzi and Tristan und Isolde in Hamburg; Lohengrin in Cologne; La Damnation de Faust at Verona; Fidelio with the Philadelphia Orchestra; and performed both Siegfrieds for Seattle Opera's 1991 presentation of the Ring cycle. Future assignments include the title role of Tannhäuser at the Met and in Linz, Tristan und Isolde in Marseilles, and a return to the Cologne Opera for performances of the Ring. Johns also frequently appears with orchestras in the U.S. and Europe in repertoire including Mahler's Das Lied von der Erde and Eighth Symphony, Schoenberg's Gurrelieder, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and Berlioz's La Damnation de Faust.

In his debut season with San Francisco Opera, bass-baritone Hartmut Welker sings the role of Kurwenal in Tristan und Isolde. The German artist studied voice at the Music Academy in Essen and made his operatic debut in 1974 in Aachen, where he sang principal roles until 1980. After a two year engagement at the Staatstheater in Karlsruhe, he began his international career, appearing at Milan's La Scala (Lohengrin), in Geneva and Paris (Khovanshchina), Madrid (Fidelio), and in Edinburgh, Hamburg, Munich and Stuttgart. Since his 1984 U.S. debut in concert performances of Boris Godunov with the Chicago Symphony, Welker frequently appears at the Vienna Staatsoper (Fidelio, Salome, Der Fliegende Holländer), in Berlin (Fidelio, Holländer), and Hamburg (Lohengrin, Salome, Fidelio and Holländer). Highlights of his 1986-87 season include a debut at the Royal Opera Covent Garden in Fidelio, and Barnaba in La Gioconda at the Lyric Opera of Chicago. Recent assignments include Alberich in a new production of the Ring cycle in Cologne, Lohengrin in Vienna, Berlin and London, Khovanshchina and Boris Godunov in Vienna, as well as his Metropolitan Opera debut as Pizarro in Fidelio. ALFRED MUFF

Bass-baritone Alfred Muff, who made his U.S. debut as Barak in San Francisco Opera's 1989 production of Die Frau ohne Schatten, appears as King Marke in Tristan und Isolde. Born in Lucerne, Switzerland, he became a member of the ensemble of the Landestheater in Linz, Austria, in 1980 where he sang Philip II in Don Carlo, Orest in Elektra, Leporello in Don Giovanni, the title roles of Boris Godunov and Falstaff, as well as a critically praised portrayal of Hans Sachs in Die Meistersinger. He was a member of the Nationaltheater of Mannheim from 1984 to 1986, and appeared with that company as Barak, Hans Sachs, and in the title role of Der Fliegende Holländer. Subsequent guest appearances in concert and in opera included performances at Milan's La Scala, the state operas of Hamburg and Munich, the Vienna State Opera, The Grand Théâtre de Genève, Rome's St. Cecilia Academy, and the festivals of Lucerne, Zurich, Granada and Madrid. In 1986, he became a member of the Zurich Opera, where he sang his first Wotan and Wanderer in a new production of the Ring cycle, in addition to the roles of Barak, Sachs, the Dutchman, and Jokanaan in Salome. He made his Paris Opera debut in 1986 as Philip II in the original French version of Don Carlos, and returned to that house the following year for Der Fliegende Holländer. He made his U.S. orchestral debut in 1988 with the Chicago Symphony under the baton of Georg Solti in performances of the German Requiem. Muff has also appeared in Der Fliegende Holländer at La Scala and in Barcelona, Die Walküre, Siegfried, Nabucco, Tosca and Mefistofele in Zurich, Tannhäuser in Bonn, Oedipus Rex in Geneva, Die Meistersinger and Parsifal in Mannheim, Holländer and Salome in Barcelona, Die Frau ohne Schatten in Munich, and Die Zauberflöte at the Aix-en-Provence Festival. Recent successes include Wotan and the Wanderer in the Ring cycle, the title role of Mefistofele and Scarpia in a new production of Tosca at the Zurich Opera, Kezal in a new staging of The Bartered Bride in Bonn, as well as concerts in Rome, Geneva and Lausanne. Muff's recordings include the first complete version of Die Frau ohne Schatten and the Aix-en-Provence production of Die Zauberflöte.

JOHN DAVID DE HAAN

Tenor John David De Haan sings the role of Melot in Tristan und Isolde. A native of Kansas, he participated in the 1985 Merola Opera Program and, after portraying Don Ottavio in Western Opera Theater's tour of Don Giovanni, became a 1986 Adler Fellow, and was presented in the Schwabacher Debut Recital series. He made his San Francisco Opera debut in the summer of 1986 as Arturo in Lucia di Lammermoor, returning that fall in the title role of Faust for the family performances. In 1987, he stepped in on short notice to replace an ailing colleague as Roméo in Roméo et Juliette. He was seen here in 1989 as Fenton in Falstaff and Cassio in Otello, and appeared with the Company last fall as Andres in Wozzeck. After receiving the newly established Eleanor Steber Music Foundation Award, he has made numerous appearances with U.S. opera companies, singing Don Ottavio with the Greater Miami Opera, Eisenstein in Die Fledermaus with the Lyric Opera of Kansas City, Anatol in Vanessa with Opera Theatre of St. Louis, and Ferrando in Così fan tutte at Chautauqua. His credits during the 1988 season include Alfredo in La Traviata with the opera companies of Indianapolis, Memphis and Syracuse, and his debut with the Detroit Symphony in Bach's St. John Passion. Tristan und Isolde / Synopsis

The Cornish knight, Tristan, has slain Morold, an Irish warrior; but Tristan was wounded in the combat and cared for by the Irish princess, Isolde, skilled in the magic arts. When she recognized him as the man who killed Morold, her cousin and fiancé, she tried to take revenge on Tristan with his own sword. However, she found herself unable to strike, overcome with love for her victim. Love also burned in Tristan's heart but, once cured, he returned to Cornwall and the court of his uncle, King Marke. When Tristan came again to Ireland it was not to proclaim his love for Isolde but to bring her back to Cornwall to marry King Marke. At this point in the story, as Tristan's ship bearing Isolde nears the Cornish coast, the opera begins.

ACT I

The unhappy Isolde is angered by a sailor's song about an Irish maid. Soon we see the reason for her discontent: Tristan, stubbornly standing at the helm with his servant Kurwenal. Isolde, her hidden love almost turned to hate, sends her servant Brangäne to ask Tristan to come to her. Tristan politely refuses—he must help bring the boat to shore—and Kurwenal, springing to his master's assistance, sings a jeering song about Morold.

Brangäne takes these replies to Isolde who angrily recalls the once feeble knight she cured and spared from rightful vengeance. Brangäne attempts to calm her and reconcile her to her glorious future as King Marke's queen. Isolde can only see an unbearable life, constantly in the presence of a man—the man she loves—who coldly denies her love. When Brangäne points to the love potion Isolde's mother has sent to ensure the happiness of the marriage, Isolde turns instead to a potion that brings death.

Land is sighted but Isolde refuses to leave until Tristan himself comes to ask for forgiveness "for an unnamed wrong." Kurwenal takes the message and Isolde, after a farewell embrace, tells Brangäne to prepare a "cup of peace," using the vial of poison. She and Tristan will drink it together and she will find peace from her tormenting desires.

Tristan arrives, guiltily hiding his love, and claims that honor and duty have kept him from her. Isolde reminds him of the past and how she spared him when honor demanded his death. Tristan offers her his sword to complete the act but she refuses, asking him instead to drink a cup of reconciliation with her.

The trembling Brangäne prepares the drink, and Tristan, sensing what is in it, eagerly swallows "oblivion's kindly cup." Isolde follows suit and the two suddenly discover not death but love they can no longer resist. Brangäne has used the love potion instead and now Tristan's honor and Isolde's shame are but troubled dreams as the lovers embrace. Brangäne frantically tries to separate them as the sailors hail King Marke who has come to meet his intended bride.

ACT II

On a summer night in the torch-lit garden before Isolde's chamber in King Marke's castle, Brangäne and Isolde listen as the horns of the King's hunting party recede in the distance. Isolde is waiting impatiently for Tristan to come to see her while the King is away. Brangäne warns her that she suspects this hunting party is a trick devised by Melot, one of Marke's courtiers, to entrap them. But Isolde insists that the torch be extinguished, the pre-arranged signal to Tristan. When Brangäne again tries to dissuade her, Isolde throws the torch to the ground herself.

Soon Tristan appears in the darkness and the lovers embrace passionately while Brangäne keeps a look-out. Throughout this love night's "love duet" they are so lost in each other that they do not hear her warning them of the approaching dawn. Only her scream of terror and Kurwenal's hurried warning can penetrate their rapture, but it is too late. The King and his court suddenly appear, and Marke bitterly reproaches Tristan, the man he trusted above all others, for this betrayal. Tristan has no reply. He turns to Isolde and asks her to accompany him to the "land of night" where he must go. Melot draws his sword at this insult to his King; Tristan leaps to the challenge only to deliberately let himself be run through. As he sinks to the ground, Isolde throws herself upon him and the act ends.

ACT III

At Tristan's castle in Brittany, the fatally wounded Tristan lies on a bank of earth overlooking the sea. Kurwenal is with him and bids a shepherd keep watch on the sea for ships and to pipe a merry tune should he see any. Tristan finally awakens and Kurwenal explains how he brought him home. Feverishly, Tristan calls for Isolde. Kurwenal explains that he has sent for her to work her magic cures. Tristan soon imagines that he can actually see her ship. Kurwenal doubts this but suddenly, as the shepherd's tune becomes merry, he runs to the watch-tower where he sees and describes the approaching sails before going to the shore to welcome Isolde.

Tristan struggles to his feet, tearing at his bandages—not knowing that "she who can close his wounds forever" is coming. Frantic, he stumbles and falls into Isolde's arms and dies. She collapses beside him while Kurwenal watches in horror.

Suddenly the sound of weapons is heard. The shepherd tells Kurwenal that another ship has appeared. It brings Melot and King Marke. Kurwenal fiercely attacks, killing Melot, but is himself mortally wounded. He sinks to the earth at Tristan's feet as Marke and Brangäne try to tell him that it is all a mistake, that they come in peace. Marke weeps over the body of Tristan while Brangäne revives Isolde and explains that she has told the King about the potion and he has come to forgive her and unite her with her lover. But Isolde can only see Tristan, and, in her heart-rending song of farewell, she sees him transfigured. As her song reaches its climax she too falls dead, the two lovers united at last in death.

Born in Vienna, he studied piano, violin, conducting and composition in his native city. He was engaged as assistant conductor at Salzburg's Landestheater where he made his professional conducting debut in 1959 with performances of Handel's Giulio Cesare. After seven years as assistant conductor in Heidelberg, he became principal conductor at the Deutsche Oper am Rhein in Düsseldorf, where for 10 years he led a wide variety of operas -- from Mozart to Alban Berg. In 1978, he became general music director in Bremen, where he continued to conduct operas and concerts. Maestro Schneider made his Bayreuth Festival debut in 1981 with Der Fliegende Holländer, an assignment he repeated at the Festival the following year. For three consecutive years (1984-86) he conducted the entire Ring cycle at the Wagner Festival in Bayreuth, and in 1985 was named Director of Opera and Music in Mannheim. During his years in Switzerland, Mansouri began fulfilling engagements as guest director at various houses throughout Italy (including Milan's La Scala and the companies of Naples, Palermo, Genoa, Turin and Perugia) and North America: Chicago, Houston, Santa Fe, Philadelphia, Tulsa, San Diego, Dallas, and both the Metropolitan and New York City Opera companies in New York. From 1971 to 1975, he served as artistic adviser and staged productions for the Tehran Opera in Iran. His film credits include opera sequences in Yes, Giorgio and the critically praised 1987 film Moonstruck.

MAURO PAGANO

The late Mauro Pagano created the sets and costumes for Tristan und Isolde. The internationally renowned designer's first assignment for San Francisco Opera was creating the 1986 production of Menotti's The Medium. Last fall, his sets for Capriccio and the sets and costumes for Il Ritorno d'Ulisse in Patria were seen on the War Memorial stage. Pagano designed the sets for La Scala's 1985 season-opening production of Aida, along with the sets for Massenet's Cendrillon and Offenbach's The Tales of Hoffmann in Brussels; the set design for the world premiere of Hans Werner Henze's version of Monteverdi's Il Ritorno d'Ulisse in Patria at the Salzburg Festival and, at the Paris Opera, costumes for Gluck's Iphigénie en Tauride. He has also created the sets for The Barber of Seville at the Edinburgh Festival and at La Scala, and the designs for productions of Un Ballo in Maschera, L'Incoronazione di Poppea and La Gazza Ladra in Cologne. Additional projects include new productions of La Sonnambula and Alceste at La Scala, Don Giovanni in Salzburg, and, in 1988, Der Fliegende Holländer at the Bayreuth Festival.

THOMAS J. MUNN

Thomas J. Munn, Lighting Director and Design Consultant for San Francisco Opera since 1976, designed the lighting for the new productions of War and Peace, Tristan und Isolde, Elektra and Das Verratene Meer, and for the revivals of La Traviata and Carmen. He has created the lighting and special effects for over 140 productions for the Company, including the highly acclaimed Ring cycle last year, as well as this past summer's presentations of The Magic Flute and Così fan tutte. As scenic adviser, he has designed scenery for SFO productions of Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk, Roberto Devereux, Pelléas et Mélisande, Billy Budd and Nabucco, as well as for this fall's revival of Don Giovanni. Munn has designed scenery and lighting for Broadway, Off-Broadway, regional theater, ballet, and films. His television credits include San Francisco Opera productions of La Gioconda (for which he received a 1979 Emmy Award), Samson et Dalila, Aida, L'Africaine, La Bohème, Orlando Furioso and Mefistofele. This past April, he toured Japan with the Opera Center production of Carmen as scenic supervisor and lighting director. Credits for other companies include Madama Butterfly for the Netherlands Opera, and scenery and lighting for Hartford Ballet's productions of Coppélia and The Nutcracker. Next year he will light productions of Andrea Chénier and Mefistofele for the Houston Grand Opera. In addition to his many theatrical endeavors, Munn is often engaged as consultant for architectural projects, the Muziektheater in Amsterdam, the Netherlands, being one of his most notable achievements.

A fluid-that-changes-everything is essential to the Celtic legend of Tristan and Isolde that has been circulating through the veins of European culture for more than seven centuries. In the fullest account, from the 13th century, Gottfried von Strassburg's novel-length verse epic Tristan, it is a love-philtre, concocted by Isolde's mother (also named Isolde, and the healing woman in the original tale) for her daughter and King Marke to drink on their wedding night, which during the voyage an ignorant servant offers to Marke's nephew and the bride-to-be as wine. Wagner's version turns accidental calamity into necessity. "Der Liebestrank" ("the draught of love") that Brangäne, Isolde's servant has deliberately substituted for the poison, does not make Tristan and Isolde feel their own feelings—they already feel them, are being martyred by them. It simply makes it impossible for them to go on not acknowledging their love.

The love-potion is treated in a comic register in another opera, Donizetti's L'Elisir d'Amore (1832), which opens with the well-to-do heroine reading to a group of peasants a reduction of the Celtic legend to a tale of conventionally unrequited love with a happy ending. Handsome Tristan procures from a "saggio incantatore" ("a wise sorcerer") a "certo elisir d'amor" ("a certain elixir of love"); no sooner has the beautiful but indifferent Isolde taken a sip than a matching love is created—instantly. "Cambiata in un istante/ quella beltà crudele/ fu di Tristano amante/ visse Tristan fedel." ("Changed in an instant/ that unkind beauty/ became Tristan's true love/ and lived faithful to him.") The drink that makes someone fall in love belongs to the same family of potions, spells, and charms that transforms princes into frogs and mermaids into princesses: it is the instant metamorphosis of fairy tales. Mere fairy tales. Not only does such magic not exist, according to Donizetti's buffa realism, it isn't necessary: the fluid sold by an itinerant quack to the opera's hero to woo the woman he thinks (wrongly) doesn't love him is actually Bordeaux. Instead of what is given as wine being really a magic potion, what is fobbed off as a magic potion is mere wine—the inevitable, comic deflation of the fantasy.

Its tragic dissolution is Wagner's, a quarter of a century later: a potion that, rather than making something possible, heightens impossibility, loosening the tie to life. The fluid that Brangäne gives the hapless pair does not just reveal (and therefore unleash) a feeling. It undoes a world. Love subtracts them instantly, totally, from civil society, from normal ties and obligations, to cast them into vertiginous solitariness (rather than a romantic solitude à deux) that brings on an inexorable darkening of consciousness. Where are we? asks Isolde at the beginning of the opera. Where am I? She asks Tristan at the end of Act I, after they have drunk the potion, as the boat lands in Cornwall. The king is here, someone says. What king? says Tristan. And Tristan does not know where he is when he awakens in Act III. What herds? what castle? what peasants? he asks—as his loyal retainer Kurwenal explains that he has been brought home to Brittany, his own kingdom, that he is lying on the rampart of his own castle. Love is an antignosis, a de-knowing. Each act begins with a tormented, paralyzing, anguished waiting by one for the other, followed by the longed-for arrival—and concluding with other, unanticipated arrivals, which are not only disruptive but, to the lovers, barely comprehensible. What duty? What shame?

Passion means an exalted passivity. Act I opens with Isolde on a couch, her face buried in the cushions (Wagner's stage direction), and Act III has Tristan in a coma at the beginning and supine throughout. As in Parsifal, there is a great deal of lying down and many fervent appeals for the surcease of oblivion. If the opera ended after its first two acts, one could regard this pull of the horizontal in Tristan und Isolde, the paeans to night, the dark, the equating of pleasure with oblivion and of death with pleasure, as a most extravagant way of describing the voluptuous loss of consciousness in orgasm. Whatever is being said, or being done on the stage, the music of the Act II encounter is a thrillingly unequivocal rendering of an ideal copulation. (Thomas Mann was not wrong when he spoke of the opera's "lascivious desire for bed.") But Act III makes it clear that the eroticism is more means than end, a platform for the propaganda against lucidity; that the deepest subject is the surrender of consciousness as such.

Already the emotional logic of the words of the Act II duet is a sequence of annihilating—and nihilistic—mental operations. The lovers do not simply unite, generically, as in the unsurpassably elegant formula of Gottfried von Strassburg:

A man, a woman; a woman, a man;
Tristan, Isolde; Isolde, Tristan.

Imbued with the elaborate understanding of solitude and exploration of extremes of feeling that seems the most original achievement of the Romantic movements in the arts of the last century, Wagner is able to go much further.

TRISTAN: Tristan du, ich Isolde, nicht mehr Tristan!

ISOLDE: Du Isolde, Tristan ich, nicht mehr Isolde!

("Tristan: Tristan you, I Isolde, no more Tristan!/ Isolde: You Isolde, why? Tristan I, no more Isolde!") When the world is thought to be so easily negated by the pressure of extreme feeling (the still regnant mythology of the self we owe to the 19th-century writers and composers), the feeling self expands to fill the empty space: "selbst dann bin ich die Welt" ("I myself am the world"), Tristan and Isolde had already sung in unison. The inevitable next move is the elimination of the self, gender, individuality. "Ohne Nennen, ohne Trennen" ("no names, no parting"), they sing together ... "endlos, ewig, einbewusst" ("ever, unendingly, one consciousness"). For one self to seek to fuse with another is, in the absence of the world, to seek the annihilation of both.

When lovers unite in opera what they do, mainly, is utter the same words; they speak together, as one. Their words unite, rhyme, to the same music. Wagner's libretto for Tristan und Isolde carries out this formal principle more literally and insistently then any other opera: the lovers return to echo each other's words throughout. Their fullest exchange, in the garden of Act II, has them voluptuously repeating their words back to each other, competing in their expressions of desire to unite, to die, and their denunciations of light and day. Of course their texts are not identical—and neither, for all their desire to merge, even to exchange identities, are the two lovers. Tristan is given a more complex awareness. And having sung with Isolde of the bliss of their death-bound yearning in Act II, Tristan expresses another relation to death in the last act, in the form of a soliloquy in which he separates himself from Isolde, cursing love. It had been Tristan alone in Act II who dwelt ecstatically on the potion—that flowed through him, that he drank with endless delight. Now in Act III the fluids he invokes are all bitter: "Liebestränen" ("lovers' tears") and the accursed potion, which he now proclaims, in his delirious unraveling of what Wagner makes the story's deepest layer of emotion, that he himself brewed.

The characteristic, plot-generating situation in Wagner's operas is one that has gone on too long, and is infused with the anguished longing to terminate. ("Unending melody—Wagner's phrase for his distinctive musical line—is one formal equivalent of this essential subject of prolongation, of excruciation.) Blood flows unceasingly from Amfortas's wound but he can't die; meanwhile, his father Titurel, the former Grail king, who already lies in his tomb, is being kept alive by the Grail ceremony. And ageless Kundry, painfully revived in each act, wants nothing more than to go back to sleep. Wagner turns the legend of Tristan and Isolde into a first, secular version of the longings expressed in Parsifal—with Tristan taking the lead. The Tristan of Act III is a pre-Amfortas: a suffering man who wants to die but can't ... until, finally, he can. Men are given a more developed death wish than women. (Kundry, whose longing for extinction seems even stronger than Amfortas's, is the exception.) Isolde tries to die only in Act I, when, with Tristan, she drinks the potion she believes to be poison, while Tristan actively provokes his death in all three acts, succeeding at the end by tearing the bandages from his wound when he is told that Isolde is approaching. Isolde even has a moment of doubt (or common sense) in Act II, when she evokes "dies süsse Wörtlein: und" ("this sweet little word 'and' ") ... as in Tristan and Isolde. But won't dying separate them? she asks. No, he answers.

Viewed from the narrowing and ever more excruciating perspective of the last act, the opera is (or becomes) mostly Tristan's story. Viewed more inclusively, as the story of both, Wagner's version of the old Celtic legend has an arbitrariness in its dénouement that makes it closer in feeling to the traditional Japanese tragedy of the double-suicide—the voluntary death of lovers whose situation is not entirely hopeless—than to, say, Romeo and Juliet. (And Wagner's depiction of love as tormentingly painful, consciousness-dissolving yearning recalls sentiments in the love poetry of Heian Japan.) His Tristan and Isolde are not, as in Gottfried von Strassburg's poem, star-crossed lovers thwarted by the standard obstacles: that the man has slain a close relative of the woman; that the woman is betrothed to an older male relative of the man, to whom loyalty is owed. Wagner requires something beyond these objective impediments, whose importance signifies that the lovers are members of a society, a world. The world-transcending obstacle is, then, the very nature of love—an emotion always in excess of its object; insatiable. The eroticism that Wagner exalts is one that has to self-destruct.

When Marke arrives at the end, it is not to grasp for the first time the claims of this passion but now to wish, when it's too late, as Capulets and Montagues do, that he'd been more understanding. Having learned from Brangäne that the lovers were compelled by a love-philtre to betray him, Marke (who functions as Tristan's father, and in some early versions of the story is his father) has decided to release Isolde from her vow and let the lovers marry. But union is not what Tristan and Isolde want, what they ever wanted. They want the lights turned off. Isolde's last words—the last words of the opera—are a description of losing consciousness: "ertrinken, versinken/ unbewusst höchste Lust!" ("drowning, sinking/ unconscious—supreme bliss!") The music overflows. Consciousness drowns.

Tristan und Isolde is about being overcome, destroyed by feeling ... and not only about extreme experience but intended to be one. That Wagner equates being satisfied or inspired with being overwhelmed is typically a Romantic idea of art, art that is not only about excess (Tristan and Isolde overwhelmed by their passion) but employs, in an almost homeopathic spirit, extravagant and outsized means, such as unusual bulk or duration. The element of ordeal for the audience in all this, even of risk, seemed only appropriate. A good performance of Tristan und Isolde, Wagner had predicted to Mathilde Wesendonk while composing the last act, is "bound to drive people mad." One of Wagner's favorite notions about his work was that only the strong could immerse themselves in it with impunity. When the first Tristan, the tenor Ludwig Schnorr, fell ill after the first performances in Munich in 1865, both he and Wagner worried that it would be said that he had been laid low by the role's unprecedented exertions and intensities; and when Schnorr unexpectedly died a few weeks later, Wagner (and not only Wagner) felt that perhaps the opera had killed him.

Wagner was hardly the first composer to associate the lethal, at least metaphorically, with the lyrical. But previous notions of the lethal lyrical had focused on the singer. To the librettist with whom he was working on I Puritani, Bellini wrote, "Grave on your mind in adamantine letters: A musical drama must make people weep, shudder, and die through the singing." The great singers were those who could provoke audiences to an ecstasy bordering on delirium, a standard that was set by Farinelli, Pacchierotti, and other celebrated castrati of the 18th and early 19th centuries, the first divas in the modern sense, whose voices made people swoon and weep and feel that they were being driven out of their senses, and whose appearance and extravagantly artificial manner were erotically captivating to both sexes. Napoleon declared, in praise of his favorite singer, that he felt he was going mad when he heard Crescentini sing. It is this longing to have one's normal consciousness ravished by the singer's art that is preserved in an irrepressible phenomenon usually dismissed as a mere oddity or aberration of the opera world: diva worship. The distinctively high-pitched adulation surrounding one or two sopranos (sometimes a tenor) in every generation refers to, and affirms, this much-prized experience as granted by the voice, not merely the charms of celebrity and glamour.

Wagner opens a new chapter in this operatic tradition of creating beauty that is erotically troubling, soul-piercing—the difference being that the intensity has been heightened by becoming, as it were, diffused. Though borne by the singer's voice, lyricism does not climax in the experience of the voice. Rather than being specifically, corporeally, identified with the singer's voice as it floats above the music, it has become a property of the music as a whole, in which the voice is embedded. (This is what is sometimes called the "symphonism" of Wagner's operas.)

Audiences have relished being excited, disturbed, troubled by the beauty of voices—their sweetness, their velocity. But there was, at least initially, considerable resistance to a déreglement du sens produced by music as such. What the voice did seemed superhuman and as a display of virtuosity was, in itself, admirable. The sound produced by the castrati suggested something disembodied—the words "seraphic" and "heavenly" were often used to describe these voices, though the singers themselves were clearly objects of erotic fantasy as well.

Wagner's maddening lyricism had nothing seraphic about it, whatever the spiritual messages and "higher" feelings being urged on us by the words; if anything, it seemed to come from "below," and, like the potion in the opera, to invite repressed feelings to flow forth. Berlioz described the Prelude to Tristan und Isolde, where no voices yet sing, as one long "groaning and moaning." Renouncing all the effects (and relief) of velocity, Wagner had chosen to slow down sequences of deep feeling that then either became thrilling (and addictive) or seemed unbearably oppressive. The Viennese music critic and leader of the anti-Wagnerians, Eduard Hanslick, said that the Prelude to Tristan und Isolde "reminds me of the Italian painting of a martyr whose intestines are slowly unwound from his body on a reel." Parsifal, he said, made him seasick. "There are no longer any real modulations but rather a perpetually undulating process of modulation so that the listener loses all sense of a definite tonality. We feel as though we were on the high seas, with no firm ground under our feet." Yes. We are.

The new emotional, as distinct from lyrical, intensity that Wagner brought into opera owes most to the way he both amplifies and makes agonizingly intimate (despite the epic settings) the distinctive mix of feelings depicted: lust, tenderness, grief, pity, euphoria, world-weariness. Wagner utterly transforms feelings that are staples in opera's long tradition of representing exalted sentiments, such as the association of love and death. Hearts wounded by love, death that is preferable to separation from the beloved or the loss of love ... this is the common coin of lovers' plaints, of lovers' ecstasies—long before Wagner, long before what we call Romanticism. Wagner, in Tristan und Isolde and elsewhere, made these old hyperboles of opera, understood to be expressive exaggerations, shatteringly literal. To speak nakedly and with unprecedented insistence about feeling, to be overwhelmingly intimate with audiences—Wagner's sensualism, his emotionalism was experienced as

Felix Khuner, 1906 - 1991

San Francisco Opera mourns the loss earlier this year of one of our leading musicians, the inimitable Felix Khuner, who retired from the San Francisco Opera Orchestra in 1983 after nearly 40 years of artistic service. A member of the San Francisco Symphony for 32 of those years, Khuner was also a respected teacher, an acclaimed chamber musician and a tireless leader of the Bay Area musical community.

We will all miss him and the wealth of insight he brought to us during his many years as part of the San Francisco Opera family.

invasive—was new territory for art in the mid-19th century, and it seems inevitable that such shamelessness (as it was then judged by many) be attached to the license given by opera's rich, unabashed commitment to heightened states of feeling. "But for the opera I could never have written Leaves of Grass," Whitman told a disciple late in life (though he meant Italian opera, not Wagner). His treatment of time is certainly one of Wagner's principal innovations—to extend duration being then invariably a means to intensify emotion. But the depth and grandeur of feeling of which Wagner is capable is combined, in his greatest work, with an extraordinary delicacy in the depiction of emotion. It is this delicacy that may finally convince us that we are indeed in the presence of that rarest of achievements in art, the reinvention of sublimity.

Bruno Walter once said to Thomas Mann, as they were walking home after Walter had conducted a performance of Tristan und Isolde, "That isn't even music any longer." Meaning, it is more than music. Wagner thought he was offering some kind of transforming experience or idea that transcended mere art. (Of course, he considered that his works were much more than mere operas.) But such claims seem mainly like an idea of art, a peculiarly modern idea of art, in which there is a great deal of expressed impatience with art. When artists aren't trying to subvert the art-status of what they do (saying, for instance, that it is really life), they often claim to be doing something more than art. (Religion? Therapy?) Wagner is an important part of this modern story of the inflation and coarsening of expectations about art, which has produced so many great works of art, among them Tristan und Isolde.

It was observed from the beginning that Wagner has the same effect as the continuous consumption of a psychotropic drug: like opium, said Baudelaire; like alcohol, said Nietzsche. And, as with all de-inhibiting drugs, sometimes there were violent side-effects. In the early years of Tristan und Isolde occasionally someone had to be evacuated from the theater, fainting or vomiting, in the course of the performance. It is perhaps as hard now to imagine the impact on early audiences of Wagner, particularly of this opera, and the scandal became part of that impact (I mean, of course, aesthetic scandal ... leaving aside the issue of Wagner's repugnant political views), as it is to imagine the fainting and spasms of tears produced by the voice of Farinelli. But the scandal was immense, as was the passion with which he was defended—and the incalculable influence of his work. No single artist of the 19th century was to be more influential.

Though Wagner was the first composer ever that people boasted of not just admiring passionately but of being addicted to, there have been others since. And the enchantments of addiction, in art, are now rarely viewed as anything but positive. In the era of rock & roll and of Philip Glass and John Adams, it seems normal and desirable for music to aspire to be a narcotic. We live in the time of the triumph of the "theatrocracy" that Nietzsche deplored, in which we can find many descendants of Wagner's favorite dramatic form, the pseudo-spiritual pageant of redemption. And Wagner's characteristic means (the garrulous, soft-focus libretto; the exacerbated length; the organized repetitiveness) and themes (the praise of mindlessness, the featuring of the pathos of heroes and rulers) are those of some of the most enchanting spectacles of our own day.

Wagner's adaptations of the myths of the European and specifically the Germanic past (both Christian and pagan) do not involve belief. But they did involve ideas. Wagner was highly literate, and reflective in a literary way; and he knew his sources. The creators of Einstein on the Beach made it clear that they knew nothing about Einstein, and thought they didn't have to. The emblems and bric-a-brac of heroic mythologies of the past that litter the work of the modern Wagnerians only express an even more generic pathos, and a generalized striving for effect. It is firmly thought that neither the creator nor the audience need have any information (knowledge, particularly historical knowledge, is considered to have a baleful effect on creativity and on feeling—the last and most tenacious, of the clichés of Romanticism). The gesamtkunstwerk becomes a vehicle for moods—such as paranoia, placidity—that have floated free from specific emotional situations, and for non-knowing as such. And the aptness of these anti-literary, emotionally remote, modern redemption-pageants may have confirmed a less troubled way of reacting to Wagner's very literary, fervent ones. The smarmy, redeeming higher values that Wagner thought his work expressed have been definitively discredited (that much we owe the historic connection of Wagnerian ideology with fascism). Few puzzle any more, as did generations of Wagner lovers and Wagner fearers, about what Wagner's operas mean. Now Wagner is just enjoyed ... as a drug.

"His pathos topples every taste." Nietzsche's rueful remark about Wagner seems, a hundred years after it was made, truer than ever. But is there anyone left even to be ambivalent about Wagner now, in the way that Nietzsche and, to a lesser extent, Thomas Mann were? If not, then indeed much has been lost. I should think that ambivalence (the opposite of being indifferent—you have to be seduced) is still the optimal mood for experiencing how authentically sublime a work Tristan und Isolde really is ... and how strange and troubling. o

Bel Canto Society

San Francisco Opera is honored to acknowledge those individuals who, with special generosity and foresight, have included San Francisco Opera in their estate plans. By arranging to provide support to the endowment through bequests, charitable remainder trusts, the San Francisco Opera Pooled Income Fund, named funds and other planned gifts, Bel Canto Society members enable the Company to plan far into the future. At the same time, these gifts allow the Bel Canto Society member, during his or her lifetime, to make a statement of support that will ultimately become a lasting legacy to the Company.

We invite you to join the Bel Canto Society by notifying us that you have included San Francisco Opera in your estate plans. Please contact Barbara J. Dukas, Planned Giving Director, at (415) 565-6459 for further information.

"Do You Mean That San Francisco Opera Will Send Us Four Checks Every Year?"

Absolutely! When you make a life income gift to San Francisco Opera, you and/or someone you love will receive quarterly income payments every year for life. And the income you receive may very well be greater than the income you were previously earning from the securities you gave.

In addition, your life income gift gives you the benefit of an immediate income tax deduction and avoidance of capital gains tax liability. Above all, you will have the satisfaction of knowing that your gift will help to ensure the future of the Opera for many years to come.

If you would like to learn more about gifts which pay you an income, please contact:

Supporting San Francisco Opera

San Francisco Opera extends its most sincere appreciation to all those individual and foundation contributors who helped meet the Company's needs through gifts and pledges of $500 to $1,999 for Performance Years 1990 or 1991 (recorded February 1, 1990 through August 15, 1991). Space does not allow us to pay tribute to more than 13,000 others who help make each season possible.

SERVICES

Special service for SFO patrons! Many operagoers who live in the northern section of San Francisco are regular patrons of the Municipal Railway special "Opera Bus." This bus is added to Muni's north-bound 47 line following all evening performances of the Opera and all Sunday matinees. Look for the "47 Special," after each performance in the bus zone at Van Ness Avenue and Grove Street--across Van Ness from the Opera House. Its route is: North on Van Ness to Chestnut, left to Divisadero and left to Union. It continues on Union over Russian Hill to Columbus, then left to Powell--then right to the end of the line at North Point.

Food Service The lower lounge in the Opera House is open one and one-half hours prior to curtain time for hot buffet service. Patrons arriving before the front doors open will be admitted at the carriage entrance.
Refreshments are served in the box tier on the mezzanine floor, the grand tier and dress circle levels during all performances.

Emergency Telephone The telephone number 431-4370 may be used by patrons for emergencies only during performances. Before the performance, patrons anticipating possible emergencies should leave their seat number at the nurse's station in the lower lounge, where the emergency telephone is located.

Digital Watches Patrons are reminded to please check that their digital watch alarms are switched to OFF before the performance begins.

HOW GOOD IS YOUR AGENT WITH NUMBERS?

When choosing a real estate company, the only number most sellers seem interested in hearing, naturally enough, is the highest one.

But before you list your property with the agent who recommends the highest asking price, consider this: A price too far above the real value often scares away qualified buyers. The property could take longer to sell. Worse yet, it could wind up selling for less than it might have, had it been listed correctly to begin with.

Simply put, the reality of overpricing often outweighs its allure.

At Hill & Co., we promise never to try to buy your listing by tempting you with an inflated estimate of your property's value.

We will, however, recommend the best price, after evaluating comparable properties, and applying an astute understanding of the differences between them.

But even more valuable, we offer our clients keen insights regarding San Francisco's most sought-after neighborhoods. After all, these neighborhoods have been our focus for more than 35 years.

So whether you're selling or buying property, it is well worth the extra effort to find a real estate agent who knows the numbers — everything from negotiating, to financing, lenders, title companies, deposits, and escrows. And of course, pricing.

While these issues may seem complex, there is a simple way to handle them. Call on the people who have proven their mastery of numbers in San Francisco time and time again: Hill & Co.

May we discuss some numbers? We look forward to the opportunity.

The role of Kurwenal in tonight's performance of Tristan und Isolde will be sung by Victor Braun.

Canadian baritone Victor Braun made his San Francisco Opera debut in 1968 as Enrico in Lucia di Lammermoor and Conte di Luna in Il Trovatore, returning the following year to sing the latter role on the Company's tour to Los Angeles. After his highly acclaimed portrayals of Dr. Schön and Jack the Ripper in 1989's new production of Lulu, he was seen here last fall as La Roche in the new staging of Capriccio. Braun has earned the reputation of an extremely versatile singing actor, winning acclaim for his wide repertoire, which includes the title role of Don Giovanni, Scarpia in Tosca, Mandryka in Arabella, Golaud in Pelléas et Mélisande, and Jokanaan in Salome. He made his Metropolitan Opera debut in the title role of Eugene Onegin and also sang his first Wozzeck at the Met. He has for many seasons been closely associated with the Santa Fe, Stuttgart, and Munich operas, as well as the Cologne Opera, where he has been heard in a wide variety of roles including the four villains in Les Contes d'Hoffmann and as Gérard in Andrea Chénier. Highlights of the 1988-89 season include Hans Sachs in a new production of Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg at the Paris Opera and at the opening of the new opera house in Essen; his first Orest in Elektra and Pizarro in Fidelio in Brussels; Golaud at the opening of the Florence May Festival; Don Alfonso in Così fan tutte at the Netherlands Opera; and his first performance of the title role of Der Fliegende Holländer with the Edmonton Opera. Most recently, he appeared as Balstrode in Peter Grimes in Geneva, Dr. Schön and Jack the Ripper in Toronto, and portrayed his first Wanderer in a new Ring cycle in Brussels. Future projects include Parsifal and Die Frau ohne Schatten in Essen, and Pelléas et Mélisande in Chicago and Cologne. Throughout his career, Braun has been active on the concert stage, and is currently busy recording a number of compact discs for the Dorian label.
