CARTIER. THE ART OF BEING UNIQUE

CARTIER...FOR 140 YEARS UNITING LEGEND WITH REALITY. A HISTORY SO RICH IN CREATIVITY AND ACHIEVEMENT THAT IT HAS CHANGED THE VERY COURSE OF THE JEWELERS ART. GENERATIONS OF DEDICATED AND TALENTED DESIGNERS, WORKING WITH THE NOBLEST OF EARTH'S TREASURES, HAVE TRANSFORMED DIAMONDS AND PRECIOUS METALS INTO OBJECTS OF RARE BEAUTY AND FANTASY. LIKE POETS OR MAGICIANS, CARTIER CREATORS KNOW THE WONDER OF DREAMS AND THE MYSTERY OF DESIRE. AND LIKE THOSE MASTERS OF IMAGINATION, THE CARTIER ARTISTS INTERPRET THOSE DREAMS AND DESIRES FOR A CLIENTELE WHICH, LIKE CARTIER ITSELF, IS UNIQUE IN ALL THE WORLD.

BEFORE YOU BUY A SAFE CAR, YOU SHOULD KNOW WHAT MAKES A CAR SAFE.

BMW engineers have always believed that the best way to survive accidents is to avoid them in the first place.

Which is why the dramatically new 3-Series is equipped with some rather advanced "active safety" systems. Including a high-performance, 24-valve, 189-horsepower engine. Twin-circuit antilock brakes. Responsive steering. And a patented suspension that offers greater stability and handling in emergency maneuvers.

Yet, in the event of an unavoidable accident, BMW's "passive safety" features intervene instantaneously on your behalf.

Hydraulic, regenerating bumpers help absorb the energy of impact. Seat belts automatically tighten their grip in a frontal impact. Three sensors trigger the driver's-side airbag. Even the doors are unlocked to assist occupants in escape or rescue.

More reassuring still is the fact that the new 3-Series also offers a 4-year/50,000-mile bumper-to-bumper warranty.* Along with a Roadside Assistance Program that will rally to your side at any time, on any road in the continental United States. Both of which act to safeguard you from unexpected expenses.

If the thought of such a car intrigues you, we invite you to visit your local authorized BMW dealer for a thorough test drive.

It could very well be one of the safest trips that you ever take.

SOHL

From the President and the Chairman of the Board

Welcome to our 69th Fall Season! This is a wonderful season our general director has planned, and aside from the excitement of new repertoire and artists that distinguish our fall schedule, we have other reasons to celebrate as well.

This year we have seen our subscription base grow–it is up nearly five percent over last year's total. That this could happen in a year when a general recession has taken its toll in almost every sector of the economy, is genuinely heartening to us. Our loyal subscribers are the bedrock on which the Company is based, and we shall continue to do all we can to keep you enthusiastic and happy.

We are also delighted to see the new leadership role being taken by various corporations in helping us to cover the staggeringly enormous costs of producing grand opera in the style to which our audiences have become accustomed. Three organizations have earned special recognition: Lexus, a division of Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc., is the Official Automotive Sponsor of San Francisco Opera; Delta Air Lines, Inc., has become the Official Airline of San Francisco Opera; and R. Kassman Pianos has continued to provide us with high-quality Kawai pianos, the Official Piano of San Francisco Opera.

Lexus, which has had an on-going sponsor relationship with San Francisco Opera since they underwrote our 1989 presentation of the Kirov Ballet, is also sponsoring this year's Opening Night performance of La Traviata. Our new production of Prokofiev's monumental War and Peace has been underwritten by a major grant from the Columbia Foundation, the Paul L. and Phyllis C. Wattis Foundation and a generous gift from Cynthia Wood. We are all tremendously excited by this major Company premiere, and are deeply grateful to these generous benefactors.

Other individuals and private foundations have also given generously: our Company premiere production of Bellini's I Capuleti e i Montecchi was made possible by a major gift from Herman J. Miller and Edward J. Clark; our newly refurbished Don Giovanni has been underwritten by a gift from the Bernard Osher Foundation; we gratefully acknowledge the L.J. Skaggs and Mary C. Skaggs Foundation for underwriting our new mounting of Tristan und Isolde; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Tilton for our first presentation of Attila; and the American premiere of Henze's Das Verratene Meer is taking place here through the generosity of the Paul L. and Phyllis C. Wattis Foundation. It is thanks to individuals, foundations and corporations such as these that an adventurous season of opera can be realized, and we are all in their debt.

We would also like once again to acknowledge our governmental funding sources, including the National Endowment for the Arts, the California Arts Council and the Grants for the Arts program of the San Francisco Hotel Tax Fund. We also extend our appreciation to Mayor Art Agnos and Chief Administrative Officer Rudolf Nothenberg, whose continued support has been most gratifying. And of course, we wish to express our thanks for the ongoing support of the Opera Guild and the War Memorial Board of Trustees.

General Director's Message

I am always delighted to welcome you to a new season of San Francisco Opera, but this year I am particularly so. This is the first season for which I have planned all of the elements, and I feel justifiably proud of what we have to offer you.

First of all, an opera that is especially dear to my heart — our Company premiere of Prokofiev's epic War and Peace, a project that for me is a dream come true. When I first accepted the appointment as San Francisco Opera's fourth general director, I immediately expressed my desire to mount this important masterpiece, and this year happily coincides with the centennial of the composer's birth. It is also the first Prokofiev opera ever presented by San Francisco Opera.

Another milestone event is a major American premiere of Hans Werner Henze's gripping music drama, Das Verratene Meer, based on Yukio Mishima's acclaimed novel The Sailor Who Fell From Grace With the Sea. We are honored to be the first American opera company to present this major musical event, and I am even more pleased to be able to announce that the composer will be here for this auspicious premiere.

For aficionados of bel canto, we are offering our Company premiere of Bellini's ravishing setting of the Romeo and Juliet story, I Capuleti e i Montecchi; and our first performances ever of Verdi's Attila will be heartily welcomed by fans of Giuseppe Verdi as well as those of Samuel Ramey — a very large group, indeed.

Several familiar operas will be seen in productions new to San Francisco Opera: the transcendent passion of Wagner's Tristan und Isolde, and the shattering drama of Elektra by Richard Strauss. Mozart's masterpiece Don Giovanni will be seen in a reworking of our own production, and we will bring back two of our most lavish stage spectacles, our productions of Verdi's La Traviata and Bizet's Carmen.

With so much that is new happening this fall, I don't even have room to begin listing the spectacular artists who will be making their debuts, and the favorite stars who will be returning to our stage. Perhaps even more important are the numbers of you, our devoted audience, who are returning to the War Memorial. We have an exciting season of discovery ahead of us; it is your participation that makes it all complete.

Enjoy the season!

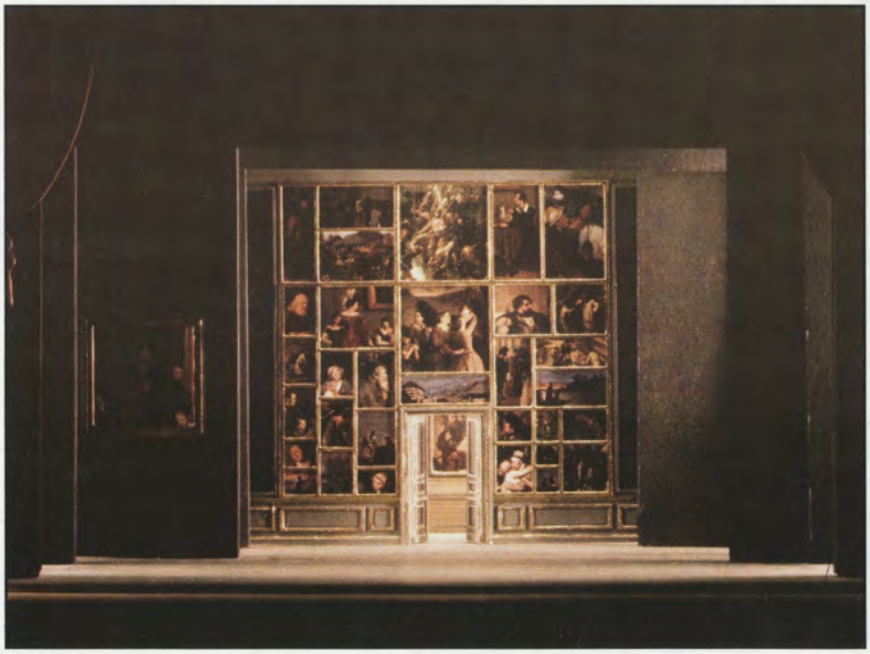
ON WAR AND PEACE

By RICHARD TARUSKIN

Leo Tolstoy hated opera. Sometimes he expressed that hatred in ways that make an opera lover merely smile, as one smiles at friends and relatives one brings along to performances, but who resolutely refuse to "get it." Haven't we all contended at one time or another with obtuse attacks, like this one, on Siegfried?

> (Act I) ... the Wanderer departs and Siegfried returns and talks with Mime for thirteen pages more. There is not a single melody the whole of this time, but merely intertwinings of the leit-motivs of the people and things mentioned. The conversation shows that Mime wishes to teach Siegfried fear and that Siegfried does not know what fear is. Having finished this conversation, Siegfried seizes one of the pieces of what is meant to represent the broken sword, saws it up, puts it on what is meant to represent the forge, melts it, and then forges it and sings: 'Heiho! heiho! heiho! Ho! ho! Aha! oho! aha! Heiaho! heiaho! heiaho! Ho! ho! Hahei! hoho! hahei!' and Act I finishes.



> (Act II) ... enter the god Wotan, again with a spear and again in the guise of a wanderer. Again his sounds, together with fresh sounds of the deepest bass that can be produced. These latter indicate that the dragon is speaking. Wotan awakens the dragon. The same bass sounds are repeated, growing yet deeper and deeper. First the dragon says, 'I want to sleep,' but afterwards he crawls out of the cave. The dragon is represented by two men; it is dressed in a green scaly skin, and waves a tail at one end while at the other it opens a kind of crocodile's jaw that is fastened on and from which flames appear. The dragon (who is meant to be dreadful and may seem so to five-year-old children) utters some words in a terribly bass voice. This is all so stupid, so like what is done in a booth at a fair, that it is surprising that people over seven years of age can witness it seriously; yet thousands of quasicultured people sit and attentively hear and see it, and are delighted.

This description comes from Tolstoy's tract What Is Art?, which he wrote at the age of 70 in 1898, long after his famous novels (and almost 30 years after War and Peace was published). He had repudiated those books for the same reason he repudiated Wagner's Ring, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and in fact most of what the world regards as great art. Yet he was obviously no philistine. On the contrary, he was surely the most sophisticated creative artist then alive (and the subtle calculation of his mock-philistinism was itself evidence of that). Nor was he even lacking in musical education. He could play the piano after a fashion and even composed waltzes in his youth. But he had long since decided that art, as the world regarded it, was in contradiction with Christian morality. "Listening to this opera," he wrote, concluding his demolition of Siegfried-through-the-eyes-of-a-child:

I involuntarily thought of a respected, wise, educated, country laborer—one, for instance, of the wise and truly religious men whom I know among the peasants—and I pictured to myself the terrible perplexity such a man would be in were he to witness what I was seeing that evening. What would he think if he knew of all the labor spent on such a performance, and saw that audience, those great ones of the earth—old, bald-headed, grey-bearded men, whom he had been accustomed to respect—sitting silent and attentive, listening to and looking at all these stupidities for five hours on end?

He would have thought (to make a long story short) that the great men of the earth were enjoying the experience of opera because it enhanced their self-esteem. And it enhanced their self-esteem to witness works of "counterfeit art" (as Tolstoy called such productions) precisely because it enabled them to despise laborers and peasants, who would not pretend to understand. Such art was counterfeit because it divided people rather than uniting them. Sensitive not only to the pleasures of music but also to its "hypnotic" influence and hence its power to uplift or corrupt, Tolstoy maintained that there could be no aesthetic judgment without an ethical component. (Beethoven had already come under Tolstoy's suspicion a decade earlier in the novella "The Kreutzer Sonata," where the great composer's purportedly "erotic" music precipitated the breakup of a marriage and a murder.)

Good art was art that communicated simple ideas and emotions directly and intelligibly, uniting artist and audience in accord with Christian teachings. For Tolstoy, opera, with its mongrel mixture of media, its needless complexity, its irreality, and its reliance on flamboyant convention, was the worst art of all. It epitomized the falsity of art at its most debased and stood as metaphor for falsity in social relations.

And even sharper than his condemnation of opera's consumers was Tolstoy's derision of its producers. What is Art? opens with a rollicking satire of an opera in rehearsal, followed by some chilly moralizing on the unworthiness of the enterprise and the un-Christian attitudes that must necessarily infect those who devote their lives to the frivolous perfectionism art demands. After describing a harangue administered by the exasperated conductor, Tolstoy notes:

> I have seen one workman abuse another for not supporting the weight piled upon him when goods were being unloaded, or at hay-stacking, the village Elder scold a peasant for not making the rick right, and the man submitted in silence. And however unpleasant it was to witness the scene, the unpleasantness was lessened by the consciousness that the business in hand was necessary and important and the fault for which the Elder scolded the laborer was one which might spoil a necessary undertaking.

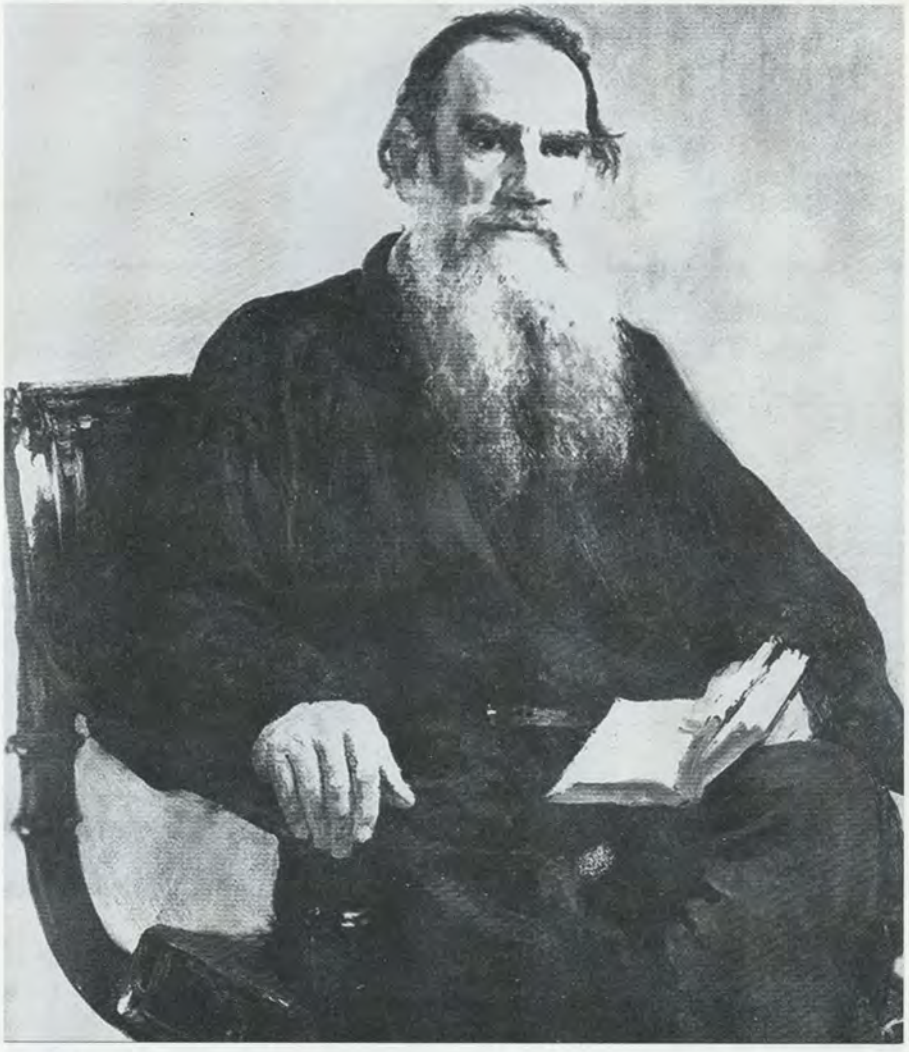
But what was being done here? For what, and for whom?

All of a sudden it's hard to smile. Our very presence in this hall tonight is being weighed in a moral balance against us. And those of us who remember our War and Peace will recall that it, too, contains an acerbic description of an opera—one that is absolutely crucial to the novel's plot. The scene of Natasha Rostova's moral downfall (in which she throws over the sterling Prince Andrei Bolkonsky in favor of Anatol Kuragin, a wretched rake) is set most fittingly against the background of an opera performance, compounded from recognizable elements out of Lucia, Robert le Diable, Rigoletto, Trovatore and other operas popular in Tolstoy's—not Natasha's—time. Detailing it, Tolstoy once again employed the extremely artful device of outwardly naive description (critics of a later age would call it ostraneniye, "making-strange") to unmask and condemn the absurdity of such perverted counterfeit art:

Natasha saw only the painted cardboard and the oddly dressed men and women who moved, spoke and sang so strangely in that brilliant light. She knew what it all was supposed to represent, but it was so blatantly false and unnatural that she felt alternately ashamed for the actors and amused by them.

But, craning her neck at their antics, she is eventually engulfed, and Anatol can move in on the hypnotized beauty and claim her. "When the green wooden sticks on stage really being to look like trees," writes Caryl Emerson, an outstanding critic of Russian literature, "then Anatol really begins to look like love." Truth is driven from the scene.

How ironic, then, to contemplate all the operas that have been based on the works of Count Tolstoy, to imagine all the scoldings that have been administered over the years by directors and conductors immersed in the task of staging them, and to think of all the seductions that have taken place under their spell. The latest census reports 26 Tolstoy operas, from Prodi di Mosca (the heroes of Moscow) after War and Peace, composed by one Scipione Fenzi (1823-1914), an Italian musician resident in Moscow, and performed in the port city of Taganrog in 1872, to Iain Hamilton's Anna Karenina, presented by the English National Opera in 1978. There have been contributions by the Puccini disciple Franco Alfano, (Risurrezione, 1904), by the Hungarian violinist composer Jenö Hubay (Karenina Anna, 1923), by the Czech master Bohuslav Martinů (Čim člověk žije, a one-act opera-pastorale after the story "What men live by," 1955), and by the Russo-Sino-Franco-American Alexander Tcherepnin (Ivan the Fool, radio opera after the "Tale of Ivan the Fool and His Two Brothers, Semyon the Warrior and Taras the Paunchy, and Their Dumb Sister Malanya and the Old Devil and the Three Little Devils," 1968). The most popular item among opera composers has of course been Anna Karenina, Tolstoy's 1877 novel about ungovernable passion, the quintessential operatic theme; it inspired no fewer than ten lyric settings, not counting an unrealized project of Janáček's, for which sketches survive, dated 1907. Janáček (whose affinity for Russian literature is well attested by his operas after Ostrovsky and Dostoyevsky) also made sketches, in 1916, for an opera after Tolstoy's late moralizing fable, "The Living Corpse."



Leo Tolstoy, 1828-1910, in a painting by Ilya Repin, made in 1887.

But of course pride of place among Tolstoy operas must go to Prokofiev's magnum opus, War and Peace (1941-1952). And the irony of opera after Tolstoy is compounded by the fact that, while he does not show the imaginary opera Tolstoy described, Prokofiev devoted practically the whole first half of his gigantic work to the episode Natasha's night at the opera sets in motion: her infatuation and planned elopement with Anatol.

There are greater ironies, painful ones. Prokofiev wrote his opera under conditions that might have obtained were the sternly moralizing Tolstoy not merely a writer but a ruler, empowered to enforce his strictures by totalitarian decree. For the strange fact is that the esthetics that reigned compulsory in Stalin's Russia owed a great deal more to Tolstoy than they did to Marx or Lenin. The doctrine of Socialist Realism was in fact Tolstoy's doctrine of Christian art with Christ nominally removed, but with all its moral and ideological requirements intact and now coerced in the name not of a Church but of a Party. There was the same ideal of "infection," by which art was enjoined to spread the Good News. There was the same ideal of universal accessibility, measured by the reception of peasants and laborers. And there was the same requirement that art must unite the community, not divide it, thereby to serve purposes that transcended the personal concerns of artists.

Prokofiev, who grew up an enfant terrible, and who matured in the crucible of international modernism, did not submit easily to this regime. But he triumphed within it, and over it. With 71 solo roles in addition to a large and very active chorus, 13 scenes each requiring its own set, and an uncut running time of more than four hours, War and Peace is a tall order, perhaps the tallest, for an opera house to mount. And yet Prokofiev's masterwork is one of the tiny group of operas produced since the end of the Second World War to have become full-fledged repertory standards. The opera's success, while slow in coming, has gloriously vindicated the composer's faith in his work--a faith that was tested over 12 years of frustration and seeming failure, as he coped first with bureaucratic tampering, then denunciations and bans. By the time he died, in 1953, Prokofiev had revised the opera four times in an effort to keep up with a changing political line he could never second-guess. He never saw it staged complete; the Bolshoi Theater premiere of War and Peace in its now-definitive form did not take place until December 15, 1959. There is no more harrowing a tale in all the annals of opera.

According to Prokofiev's widow Lina, as early as 1935 the composer, then living in Paris, referred to an opera on Tolstoy's epic novel as a plan of long standing. The earliest concrete evidence of work on the project dates from April 1941. According to the memoirs of Mira Mendelson, Prokofiev's second (common-law) wife, she was reading the novel aloud to him when he became excited over the operatic possibilities of the episode near the end in which Natasha Rostova visits the bedside of the delirious Andrei Bolkonsky. He drew up an initial list of scenes in which the action of the first part, just as in the finished opera, centered around the ill-starred elopement of Natasha and Anatol Kuragin. The action of the second part, as envisioned at this early stage, centered on Pierre Bezukhov and his experiences on the fringes of battle and at the hands of the occupiers.

Within months after Prokofiev had drawn up his outline, the German army invaded the Soviet Union, and what the Russians call "The Great Patriotic War" was launched. Catastrophic current events were paralleling in unexpected and uncanny fashion "those pages [of Tolstoy's] recounting the Russian people's struggle against Napoleon's hordes in 1812," the composer wrote. He drew up a new plan, in which the second half of the opera, depicting the French invasion and its resistance, now began more nearly to resemble its ultimate form. The opera was composed very quickly, between August 15, 1941 and April 13, 1942, during Prokofiev's and Mendelson's period of wartime evacuation, first at Nalchik, in southeastern Russia, then in Tbilisi, the Georgian capital. It consisted of an overture and eleven scenes.

The piano score was then dispatched to Moscow for evaluation by the all-Union Committee on Art Affairs, whose approval had to precede acceptance by any Soviet theater. After an audition in May of 1942, Prokofiev received a list of stipulated revisions, which he finished by November. They included the addition of the bombastic choral Epigraph, and the expansion of the role of Field Marshal Kutuzov. While not yet quite the dominating figure he would become beginning with the next revision, the Marshal was already being divested of ordinary human qualities and transformed into a quasi-deific embodiment of the nation, exactly paralleling the way in which the image of Stalin was being promoted in the prosecution of the actual Patriotic War. This revised version of the opera was published in a mimeographed vocal score in 1943. (It is now a great bibliographic rarity.) A combination of wartime conditions and backstage politics frustrated plans for a Bolshoi production that year.

Enter the conductor Samuil Abramovich Samosud (1884-1964), a powerful figure in Soviet music. Appointed artistic director of the Maly Theater in Leningrad, he made the production of War and Peace a condition. He also insisted on completeness, which created a problem, for the score exceeded the normal length of an operatic evening. Samosud's radical solution was to expand the opera further by adding two more scenes, and performing the resulting four-hour-plus spectacle on two evenings. The conductor not only persuaded Prokofiev to add the scenes; he also chose the scenes to be added: the "New Year's Eve Ball," in Part I, and the makeshift war council at Fili in Part II, where the idea was not only to fill a gap in the plot but to provide a pretext for giving Kutuzov (in Samosud's words) "an aria such as in [Glinka's] Susanin or [Borodin's Prince] Igor—central, eloquent, crucial," so that the illustrious commander, and the monumental historical and national forces he embodied, would become the true focus of the evening. This aria then provided the great leitmotive of exalted heroism for eventual apotheosis in the concluding chorus of the last scene (now the thirteenth).

Part I of the new War and Peace, performed in Leningrad in June of 1946, enjoyed a spectacular success. Part II met with disaster. After a fully-staged dress rehearsal in July of 1947 it was vetoed (in Samosud's grim recollection) by "certain individuals, to whom it seemed that [its] historical conception was incorrect." Just what these objections were has never been explicitly revealed. Perhaps "fears" would be a better word: during 1946, Party decrees, at once Draconian and arbitrary, had been issued on political education, literature, and cinema, and many leading artists had been disgraced. (Music's—and Prokofiev's—turn would come early in 1948.) In such an atmosphere, no one dared take responsibility for approving a work dealing with a historical subject that had so many sensitive parallels with the uncertain present.

By now, as Samosud bleakly recounted, "Prokofiev's desire to see War and Peace was so urgent, so compelling, that he was prepared to go literally to any lengths of editorial changes, abbreviations, or cuts if only it would be produced." Accordingly, in a document dated December 5, 1948, Prokofiev proposed a radical condensation of the opera, ostensibly to achieve a "one-evening" spectacle, in reality to forestall ideological objections when it was already much too late. The mutilated 10-scene version thus created was the form in which the opera first became known in the West. (Many western critics still mistakenly think of it as representing the composer's final intentions rather than his desperate compromise with forces majeures.)

The definitive version of the opera was published posthumously, in 1958. It is a restored—indeed, expanded—thirteen-scene spectacle;yet it should not be thought that a complete performance necessarily entails two evenings: Mstislav Rostropovich's uncut recording (Erato ECD 75480, issued in 1988 and already, sadly, out of print) has a running time of 4'05", which is not longer than a complete performance of Glinka's Ruslan and Lyudmila or Rimsky-Korsakov's Snegurochka, to say nothing of Les Troyens or Götterdämmerung. Among the items unique to the fifth version are the duet for Natasha and Sonya in the first scene, and a new middle section for Kutuzov's grand aria in the council scene (in which a magical apparition of Moscow shines through the window, accompanied by suitably visionary music). This last interpolation was made in November of 1952, four months before the composer's death.

Part I ("Peace") unfolds around a love triangle. Its first two scenes depict the initial contact and the deepening attraction between Andrei Bolkonsky and Natasha Rostova, culminating in their memorable waltz. In the third scene Natasha is insulted by Andrei's snobbish father, which only intensifies the purity of her love and her resolve. Over the next three scenes, however, Natasha becomes unaccountably fascinated by the rake Anatol Kuragin, is deceived by him into planning elopement, but is finally humiliated to learn that he is already married. Having lost Andrei, she is offered some small comfort by Pierre Bezukhov, Anatol's irreproachable brother-in-law, who comments that if he were free to do so, he would marry Natasha himself. The last scene of Part I begins with recriminations between Pierre and Anatol, and ends with the news that Napoleon's army has invaded Russia.

Part II ("War"), in contrast to the tightly woven drama that precedes it, is a loose-jointed epic. First we see Andrei, Pierre, and Field Marshal Kutuzov amid preparations for the Battle of Borodino. Next we are treated to a glimpse of a cartoon-figure Napoleon, frustrated at the Russians' stout resistance. The Field Marshal is then shown making his fateful decision to abandon Moscow to the enemy, so that the Army, and Russia herself, might be ultimately saved. Left to reflect, he sings his great aria ("Stately, sunlit, mother of Russian cities"), composed on a theme originally meant to depict Ivan the Terrible in Prokofiev's music to Eisenstein's epic film.

The next scene, sprawling and episodic, takes in the most territory from the novel, proceeding in panoramic, non-narrative fashion. Among the events portrayed are Napoleon's arrival in vain expectations of a receiving delegation, Pierre's encounter with the Rostovs' housekeeper and his arrest under suspicion of arson, the evacuation of the insane asylum, the flight of the French actors, Pierre's encounter with the wise peasant soldier Platon Karatayev, the outbreak of multiple fires, and the inevitable patriotic chorus.

Next, in the single direct sequel to the events of Part I, the mortally wounded Andrei, unknowingly lodged with the evacuated Rostovs, wakes from his delirium—Tolstoy's famous representation of Andrei's disorientation ("pi-ti-pi-ti-pi-ti . . .") is actually set by Prokofiev for an offstage chorus—and beholds Natasha. She begs forgiveness; he bears no grudge. They relive happier times, evoked by a haunting reprise of their waltz in Act I. This wonderfully realized scene epitomizes the "clairvoyant" advantages of opera over the spoken theater: the music enables us to hear the characters' unspoken thoughts and thus can function, within a dramatic context, like a narrator.

The final scene of War and Peace is another panorama, this time depicting the French retreat: together with the retiring convoy march some prisoners, including Pierre and Platon Karatayev. The latter, exhausted, is executed. A partisan detachment attacks the convoy and frees the surviving prisoners. Marshal Kutuzov arrives and is greeted by all with the grandiose choral reprise of his big aria. It is only one of the many reprises that give this scene, like the one preceding it, the character of a summation.

Like many works by great but unconventional artists—indeed, like its literary prototype—Prokofiev's War and Peace has a perfection of form that is perhaps more readily perceived intuitively, as it is by audiences the world over, than by those exigent enforcers of convention known as critics, who still regularly berate it. Just as Tolstoy's "baggy monster" of a novel incorporates attributes of other genres (epic, chronicle, sermon, historical tract), Prokofiev's opera (like the operas of Glinka and Borodin) incorporates conspicuous elements of oratorio. Like the most famous operas of Tchaikovsky and Mussorgsky, moreover, War and Peace is a medley of scenes from a familiar source rather than a trimly plotted drama. One could extend the parallel and make it even more specific: Part I follows in the tradition of Tchaikovsky's aristocratic melodramas Eugene Onegin and The Queen of Spades, while Part II descends from Mussorgsky's grand historical chronicles Boris Godunov and Khovanshchina.

Prokofiev's decision to focus the early action on the seduction of Natasha Rostova can seem one-sided, both in its representation of the novel's plot and in its portrayal of Tolstoy's beloved heroine, who is shown behaving in uncharacteristically selfish fashion. One way of explaining Prokofiev's selection is simply to note that only a complete account of Natasha's attempted elopement can fully motivate the penultimate scene, whose operatic potential has sparked the entire project. But that does not suffice. Prokofiev's true accomplishment was to give the two halves of his work a hidden correspondence. They are parallel parables of betrayal compounded: Natasha/Russia, having become infatuated with Anatol/France and betrayed her true love Andrei/The People, is in turn betrayed by her seducer. Even lumbering Pierre has a place within this scheme as counterpart to Kutuzov. The double dénouement, with two mutually reinforcing summation scenes (Natasha's forgiveness, Russia's victory) side by side, make a colossal cumulative impact, lifting the opera to the level of high allegory, and lending it a human significance that transcends its—or any—historical setting.

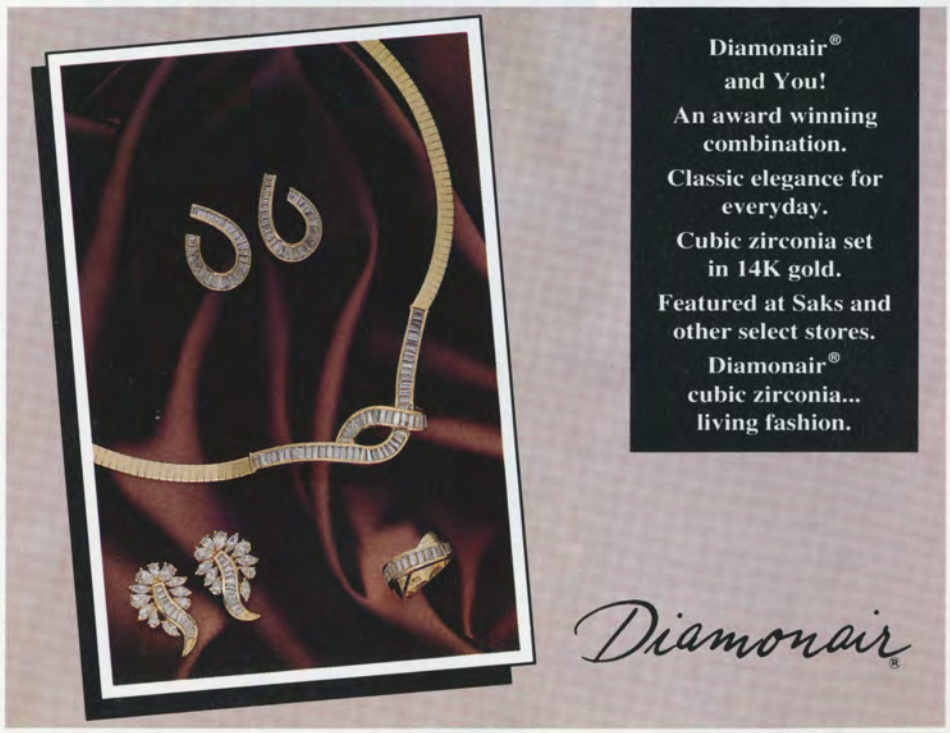
But would Tolstoy have approved? In the most obvious sense the question is frivolous, given what we know of Tolstoy's attitude toward opera as such. But War and Peace is anything but an "opera as such." It is a unique work with a unique moral and ethical appeal that edifies as much as it entertains. Tolstoy might have recognized that; indeed, he might have recognized a kinship between this opera, fashioned in arduous conformity with the tenets of Socialist Realism, and the ethically infectious art he sought to foster.

Yet he still would not have approved. For while Soviet ethics (as preached, not as enforced) were not entirely incompatible with Tolstoyan ethics, Soviet historiography was totally at odds with Tolstoy's. Prokofiev's War and Peace celebrates the heroic resistance of a people and the heroic conduct of a leader. Together, so the opera proclaims, they accomplished a miracle. Tolstoy's War and Peace totally discredits the idea of heroism. Great events are wrought not by human volition or agency, he taught (and wrote all 1500 pages of his novel in an effort to teach), but by wholly impersonal necessities the human mind can never grasp. To will a miracle and strive for it, he tried to show (mainly through the utterances and behavior of his passive, sluggish Kutuzov), is to induce disaster. Many in the Soviet Union today have reached a similar conclusion. There, patriotism no longer works so well to mask or redeem betrayal. The allegory embedded in Tolstoy's War and Peace, one senses, has more meaning for his countrymen now (and for us?) than the one embedded in Prokofiev's. ❑



S.F PALM GALLERY FEATURES EXHIBITION ON EARLY CALIFORNIA OPERA FAY-YEN-FAH

What was the first grand opera written by Americans to be produced outside this country? What American opera stopped traffic in San Francisco in 1926? What 1920s Californian was the first American dancer to partner Anna Pavlova? What flamboyant Berkeley graduate played opposite Greta Garbo and made one of the first movies set in the ballet world?

The answers to these questions will be found in "Theatrical Splendor," an exhibition documenting a little-known but fascinating chapter in California's musical history. Presented by the San Francisco Performing Arts Library & Museum (SF PALM), the display chronicles the creation of the opera Fay-Yen-Fah, and the life and work of Hubert Julian Stowitts (1892-1953), who designed the original sets and costumes.

Fay-Yen-Fah was a grand opera set in legendary China, with music by California composer Joseph Redding and libretto by Templeton Crocker, grandson of California railroad and banking magnate Charles Crocker. The opera, which began life in 1917 as a Bohemian Club presentation called The Land of Happiness, was one of the very first West Coast operas, and was indeed touted as the earliest opera composed and written by Americans. Choreographed by a very young George Balanchine, and conducted by Victor de Sabata, the opera had its premiere in Monte Carlo in 1925, and was revived there in 1932. The American premiere took place in San Francisco on January 11, 1926 at the Columbia Theater, conducted by Gaetano Merola, founder of the San Francisco Opera.

The exhibition, featuring a rarely-seen portfolio of 34 diachromie lithographs, depicting the sumptuous costume designs commissioned by Crocker and created by Hubert Julian Stowitts, runs from September 20 to January 3rd at the SF PALM Gallery, 399 Grove Street, San Francisco. Gallery hours are Monday and Friday, noon-5 p.m. and Tuesday through Thursday, noon-6 p.m. Saturday hours will be instituted in early October; visitors may call for complete information.

There will be a guest lecture by Guest Curator Anne Holliday on "The Life and Adventures of Hubert Julian Stowitts," on Tuesday, October 22, at 6:00 p.m. at SF PALM. For further information call (415) 255-4800.

1812: WAR WITHOUT PEACE

By MALCOLM MOSHER, JR.

Europe was in a state of war almost continuously from 1792 to 1815, mostly concentrated around France. As the various conflicts involved most nations, it is not surprising that the period profoundly influenced the arts, particularly literature, for many years. Some literary works set in the period eventually found their way into the operatic canon. For example, Puccini's Tosca, based on the Sardou play, is set in Rome on the eve of the Battle of Marengo, where Napoleon liberated most of central Italy from Austria. Britten's Billy Budd, based on the Melville novella, is set on an English frigate enforcing the naval blockade off the coast of France in 1798. Prokofiev's War and Peace is drawn from the latter part of the Tolstoy novel that deals with the pivotal French-Russian War of 1812. The outcome shaped European politics and commerce for the next century since, with the destruction of its Grande Armée, French hegemony over Europe ended. Within sixteen months, France would be brought to her knees by her enemies, and it is ironic that the Tsar of Russia, whose symbolic capital (Moscow) had fallen to Napoleon in September of 1812, would triumphantly enter Paris in 1814. But what caused the war and how was it that the French army, vastly superior in numbers and leadership, was all but obliterated?

In 1801, Tsar Alexander I ascended the throne of Russia, having taken part in the murder of his own father in order to do so. Opposed to the French Revolution and its reforms, he joined a coalition with Prussia, Austria and England that declared war on France in 1805. Over the next two years, Napoleon led his army to brilliant victories against coalition forces at Austerlitz and Friedland. Since the Russian army had suffered serious losses, Alexander sold out his allies in 1807 and arranged a separate peace with Napoleon. Greedy for power and domain, he aligned Russia with France, receiving the right to annex Finland and Turkey.

In return, Alexander agreed to join the continental blockade against England. While the French army was invincible on land, the English navy was invincible at sea. Therefore, unable to invade England, Napoleon sought to break the English by striking at their commercial empire. Just as England enforced a naval blockade against French shipping, Napoleon instituted a land blockade, closing all ports on the continent to English goods. By depriving England of a marketplace, he hoped to bring that nation to financial ruin, and closing off Russian ports was therefore a strategic move.

By 1810, Napoleon's control of the continent was complete and the effectiveness of his blockade was at its height. Relations between France and Russia, however, were strained. Although several issues led to renewed hostilities, two in particular stand out. While the continental blockade was good for France, it had a negative impact on the Russian economy. To get around it, Alexander allowed ships bearing the American flag to trade at Russian ports, even though they carried English goods from English ports. At the same time, he demanded that Napoleon remove French troops from Prussia, as they were too close to the Russian border for his liking. Napoleon refused, hoping the French military presence in Prussia would provide the threat needed to coerce Alexander into maintaining the blockade. In a remark that could have come from the American West, Alexander later stated that he felt the world was not big enough for the two of them, and, on December 13, 1810, he opened Russian ports to English ships and imposed stiff tariffs on imported French goods.

For most of 1811, Napoleon tried to bring Russia back into the fold by reminding Alexander of French military preparedness, but the latter rejected all warnings. Indeed, Alexander attempted to undermine Napoleon's influence in French-controlled Poland. Poland had ceased to exist as an independent kingdom in 1795, when it was divided between Russia, Prussia, and Austria. Following the defeats of Prussia and Austria, Napoleon united the Polish territory held by those powers into a unified Grand Duchy of Warsaw. Seeking to stir up unrest, Alexander made clandestine overtures to the Polish nobility, promising to re-establish a unified Polish kingdom, albeit with himself as king. The offer fell on deaf ears, for the Poles had little reason to trust the Tsar and they viewed Napoleon as a liberator.

By August of 1811, Napoleon conceded that war was inevitable and planned an offensive for the following spring. His strategy was simple–with all of his forces concentrated, one or two quick and decisive battles would force Alexander back into the continental blockade. To this end, he began assembling an enormous army along the Russian frontier in Poland, demarcated by the Niemen River. On June 24, 1812, the invasion began.

Sources close to the campaign reported that the army ranged from 325,000 to 600,000, although it is generally held today that some 420,000 troops actually crossed the Niemen, accompanied by 150,000 horses. Later in August, another 30,000 men would be sent to maintain control over the conquered territory to the rear of the main army. Unlike his earlier armies, which were composed of Frenchmen whose disciplined and fervent support for their commander had brought Napoleon to supreme power on the continent, this army was cosmopolitan, drawn from the various countries under French hegemony. In fact, Frenchmen made up less than half of the force. For some foreign troops, such as the Poles and Italians, serving Napoleon was an honor. Others were indifferent to their commander and cared little for the war. Many had been freshly drafted into service and had never seen action before. Thus, in spite of its size, the army was not highly motivated in every quarter. The chief advantage was that it was directed by Napoleon, who is to this day still regarded by many as the most brilliant general ever, and his supporting staff of generals consisted of Europe's finest.

To sustain such an army, Napoleon assembled vast stores of supplies, as well as wagons to convey them to the troops in the field. These wagons proved to be one of the ultimate factors contributing to his defeat, for they were built for the stout compacted roads of Europe, whereas the Russian roads were sandy and soft.

Numerically, at 211,000, the Russian army was vastly inferior, although the men were highly motivated to defend their homeland. Alexander himself took charge at the outset, which hardly boded well for the Russian cause. It was his blundering leadership that had led to overwhelming defeat at Austerlitz, and once again he nearly proved to be the undoing of his country. Ignoring the counsel of seasoned generals, he chose to follow the plan of a self-styled military expert, General Pfuhl. The latter was aptly named, for his strategy was indeed that of a fool. It divided the army into two parts: one, commanded by General Barclay de Tolly, was to fall back 200 miles and take position in a fortified stockade at Drissa, east of the Dvina River; the other, commanded by General Bagration, was to move southwest and attack the Grande Armée in the rear.

The flaw of this plan was evident as soon as Barclay reached the Drissa, for the stockade was indefensible. With half of the army somewhere to the southwest under Bagration, Barclay had no choice but to retreat east to Vitebsk. Alexander retired to the safety of St. Petersburg.

In one sense,the strategy worked, for the quick decisive battle eluded Napoleon. Knowing the enemy was retreating, he pressed his army forward, deeper into Russia, seeking to overtake the Russians and force a battle, but the weather worked against him. Temperatures in late June and July were oppressive, often in the 90s, coupled with violent thundershowers. For the motivated veterans inured to hardship, vigorous marching in the heat was not as problematic as it was for the unmotivated. To make matters worse, the supply train was unable to keep pace with the army. The wagons had found the going hard enough in the soft sand and the showers reduced the roads to muddy quagmires. Within a week, food shortages became severe, resulting in a significant lowering in discipline and morale. As could be expected, the Russian peasantry did not welcome the invaders. What the Russian army did not burn while retreating, the peasants did, to prevent any supplies from falling into the hands of the enemy. Faced with hunger and fatigue, large numbers of the army straggled behind. Others deserted, forming marauding bands combing the countryside for food. Additionally, the water was often bad, causing dysentery of epic proportions, not infrequently resulting in death. The attrition rate was tremendous and by August 18th, when the army reached Smolensk, some 350 miles into Russia, the vanguard of the army had been reduced from 420,000 to 185,000. Of the missing 135,000, some had died during the increasing skirmishes between Vitebsk and Smolensk, and some were garrisoned at various locations to maintain communication and supply lines. The majority, however, had either deserted or perished from dysentery, hunger, and fatigue.

Nor were the men the only ones affected by the shortages. Little fodder could be found for the horses. Fed green rye at first, enormous numbers died within the first few weeks of the offensive.

In spite of the hardships and the retreat of Barclay, the French had twice come close to annihilating the Russian army under Bagration, but in each case, the incompetence of Jerôme Bonaparte, Napoleon's youngest brother, allowed Bagration to escape and eventually rejoin Barclay at Smolensk. Had Jerôme taken action, the war might have ended then.

Contrary to public opinion, the Russian strategy was not to lure the French further into Russia. From the very beginning, there was intense pressure to block the invaders. When Barclay retreated from Vitebsk, Alexander put Field-Marshal Kutuzov in command, with the firm directive to stand and fight. Kutuzov chose to defend Smolensk, where large skirmishes led to considerable losses on each side. Outmaneuvered, he retreated again, but not before an artillery duel led to a fire that destroyed most of Smolensk, including provisions stored there. In their retreat, the Russians also abandoned thousands of their wounded in the city, where they were consumed in the blazing inferno. Once again a decisive battle eluded Napoleon; he was even deeper into Russia, and his supply situation was even more critical. Prior to Smolensk, he had entertained the idea of spending the winter at this city and resuming the campaign the following spring. Now, with the city and the supplies in the outlying areas virtually destroyed, this option was no longer possible. Since the alternative of retreating to Poland was unacceptable, Napoleon pressed on, knowing that his adversary would eventually have to fight, in front of Moscow at the very least.

Retreating some 200 miles further into Russia, Kutuzov found a suitable defensive position at the town of Borodino. Here, the only full-scale battle of the entire campaign was fought. Kutuzov deployed his army in a convex curve, anchored by two hilltop redoubts (fortified strongholds) where his artillery was concentrated. A third redoubt at Shevardino was too far forward from the main line of defense and fell to the French on September 5. It was from this position that Napoleon, in ill health and suffering severely from dysuria, set up his command post.

From the recent skirmishes, the armies of the two antagonists had been significantly reduced. Continuing to lose men to illness, desertion, battle casualties, and garrison duty, Napoleon's forces were down to 130,000, while Kutuzov was down to 120,000.

The battle of Borodino started at 6:00 a.m. on September 7th, with cannon barrages from both sides that continued in a deafening roar, unabated, for eight hours. The noise was such that communication along the front lines could only be achieved by exaggerated gestures with one's arms. At times, the resulting smoke was so thick that neither side could see the enemy. Since the keys to the Russian defense were the two artillery redoubts, the French plan was to storm these, but to do so meant climbing up a steep ravine with Russian cannons pouring grape-shot down their throats. Over the course of the day, the French seized the redoubts from Russian defenders several times, only to be thrown back by fierce Russian counter-attacks. Neither side took prisoners; those left behind met the bayonet. By 4:00 p.m., the French gained firm control of the redoubts, but then Russians began to retire. Although urged by his generals to attack with his reserves, Napoleon decided against it, wanting to preserve them for the anticipated battle outside of Moscow.

Borodino brought victory to Napoleon, but his illness prevented his active participation, and the outcome was far from the decisive victory he wanted. The loss of life was appalling. The Russian dead numbered 43,000--one-third of the army, while the French lost 28,000, with heavy losses in the cavalry.

The intensity of the battle was described by Captain Jean Bréaut:

> "On every side one saw nothing but the dying and the dead. Twice during the battle I went to look at the faces of the cuirassiers in my squadron to see which of the men were brave. I was pleased and told them so on the spot. When I rode over to congratulate one young officer (Monsieur de Gramont) on his good bearing, I witnessed some terrible things. He told me he had nothing to complain of and that all he wanted was a glass of water. He had barely finished speaking when a cannon ball cut him in two. I turned to another officer and said how sorry I was about poor de Gramont. Before he could reply, his horse was struck dead by a cannon ball. And a hundred other incidents of this kind [happened]. I gave my horse to a cuirassier to hold for half a minute, and the man was killed ..."

In his memoirs, Napoleon would later describe Borodino as "... the most terrible of all my battles ... the French showed themselves worthy of victory and the Russians of being invincible."

Kutuzov retreated toward Moscow, holding council at the town of Fili to determine the next course of action. He was urged by everyone to defend Moscow, but with a depleted army and lacking the terrain for a sound defensive position, he retreated again and ordered Moscow to be evacuated. Napoleon reached Moscow seven days later and was surprised to find it undefended. While he had been unable to break the Russian army, possession of the most sacred city in Russia would surely bring Alexander to the peace table. If not,he could settle the army there for the winter and march on St. Petersburg in the spring.

In this he was wrong. Although grieving at the loss of Moscow, Alexander refused to talk while the invader stood on Russian soil. More significantly, the mayor of Moscow, Count Theodore Rostopchin, saw to it that Moscow would not provide winter quarters for the army. A city build mostly of wooden structures, it had already been destroyed by fire nine times between the 13th and 18th centuries. Opinions still vary on the cause of the great fire, but the preponderance of evidence indicates that Rostopchin, a crude and deceitful demagogue, acted on his own, ordering the city to be torched upon the entrance of the French.

At first the fire seemed under control, but then a rising wind fanned and spread the flames throughout the city. Anxious troops tried to fight the blaze but could find no equipment with which to do so–Rostopchin had taken the precaution of having all fire-fighting apparatus removed during the evacuation. As the blaze spread, the city became an inferno that raged from Monday, September 15th, through Thursday, September 18th. Quartered at the Petrovsky Palace several miles from the center of the city, Napoleon's officers reported that the illumination from the fire was such that, in the dead of night, one could read in one's room without any other light. For those in the city, smoke was equally intense, with many suffering acute eye inflammation.

Within the city itself, chaos prevailed. Even before the fire began, thousands of locals who had not left the city plundered the abandoned homes of their compatriots. By Tuesday, with the fire burning out of control, army discipline gave way to an anxious and universal desire to seize what one could before the flames did.

By the time the fire died out, nearly 90% of the city had been destroyed. Many of the stone structures survived, however, wherein the troops established themselves. Exploring the ruins like scavengers, they succeeded in finding adequate provisions to sustain themselves for several months, but the city was hardly suitable for winter quarters. After several failed attempts to attain a diplomatic victory and with winter fast approaching, Napoleon had to make a difficult decision. With the destruction of Smolensk, only two plans were possible--fall back to Vilna in Poland, or move south to the agriculturally rich area around Orel. Retreating to Poland would mean giving up all that had been won. With an army still numbering over 105,000, he decided to march to the south, leaving Moscow on October 19th.

Neither side knew where the other was, but advance forces from each army met at the small town of Maroyaroslavets. What began as a skirmish developed into a significant struggle lasting the better part of the day. In the end, the French were victorious, thanks primarily to the valor of the Italians and Frenchmen, but the cost to both sides was severe.

Again, Napoleon was faced with a difficult decision—continue south into unmapped territory or retreat to Poland. With the army down to a fighting force of some 70,000, Poland was the only sane choice. Without maps of the area, he elected to retreat through Smolensk, following the same route the army had taken toward Moscow. Although the countryside had already been exhausted in the march on Moscow and could promise few supplies, at least the way was familiar. Thus, on October 25, the retreat began, a harrowing tale of the utmost misery, suffering, and death.

While the weather had been previously tolerable, daylight hours were growing shorter, giving way to long nights of freezing temperatures that presented dire hardships to soldiers dressed in summer uniforms. Autumn rains again reduced the roads to muddy bogs. Travel on foot was difficult enough and was nearly impossible for wagons overloaded with supplies and booty taken from Moscow. Soon, there was no choice but to abandon many wagons (and provisions) in order to keep the army moving. To find supplies for men and horses, parties of starving men had to forage several miles away from the road and the protection of the main army. More often than not, they found death.

Between October 25th and December 13th, nearly 160,000 perished during the retreat, but less than a third died in combat. Starvation and the bone-chilling cold exacted a heavy toll. A greater number, however, were simply unable to go on. Without protection, they pleaded for mercy, but the Cossacks, partisans and peasants took no prisoners. Quick deaths were rarely the norm for the stragglers. First, in the intense cold, they were routinely stripped of their clothing and then subjected to horrendous atrocities. Such savage barbarity would not be seen again for another 125 years. A particularly illuminating description comes from the journal of General Robert Wilson, an Englishman attached to Kutuzov's staff, who reported "the slaughter of the prisoners with every imaginable previous mode of torture":

> "At Viazma, fifty French, by savage order were burned alive. In another village, fifty men had been buried alive; but these terrible acts of ferocity were minor features—they ended in death with comparatively little protracted suffering. Here death, so much invited, so solicited as a friend, came with dilatory step; but still he came without interval of torturing pause."

Wilson's journal goes on at great length, but his eye-witness accounts of the atrocities are far too graphic and grim for the current forum.

Freezing by night, living on horse flesh, and petrified of the Cossacks and partisans, morale in the retreating army had all but disappeared. The plight of the wounded and sick was desperate. They could not march and were without bandages and medicine. Rather than abandon them, Napoleon improvised ambulances from carriages and wagons, and sent them ahead, hoping that they would receive attention at Smolensk. These ambulances, constantly stuck in the deep ruts, moved slowly, thereby slowing the pace of the overall retreat. Also contributing to this were the tremendous number of camp followers, many of whom had followed their loved ones on the campaign. For their protection, Napoleon moved them into the midst of the retreating forces, although the line of retreat was stretched out that much further. At a moment when speed was essential, it took nearly twice the time to cover the same distances in retreat as it had in the march on Moscow.

By the time the army was finally united at Smolensk on November 13th, the number of soldiers fit for battle had dropped to 50,000. At this point the greatest opponent of all set in—the Russian winter. The roads had been blanketed with snow since November 7th and the temperature dropped dramatically. General Wilson reported temperatures hovering around zero degrees Fahrenheit with "a subtle, keen, razor-cutting, creeping wind that penetrated the skin, muscle, and bone to the very marrow, rendering the limb as fragile as alabaster." Ice underneath the snow made the footing treacherous and where horses slipped and fell, they rarely were able to rise up. Starving men would cut strips of flesh from the horses and eat it raw. Since cutting meat from a frozen horse is difficult, it was often cut from the fleshy parts of thighs of living horses. The frigid temperature quickly froze the blood and the animals could often trudge along for another week.

By the time the French army reached the Berezina River on November 27, the retreating force was reduced to 20,000, with another 50,000 camp followers and men no longer capable of fighting. There they joined the remnants of forces that had been garrisoned in that territory. Attempting to prevent their river crossing was a superior Russian force nearing 125,000. Even his detractors credit Napoleon's personal supervision, as well as the heroic valor of those who constructed bridges in freezing waters, with saving almost three quarters of the mass trying to cross the river. Nevertheless, the Russians later counted the corpses of 13,000 men along the river banks, along with the remains of 26,000 horses. An untold number of men and women were swept away in the river.

Between November 27th and December 13th, when the remnants of the army crossed the Niemen to safety, another 40,000 perished. Of the nearly half million men involved in the campaign, only 20,000 reached safety in Poland. Among the few survivors was a young man named Henri Beyle, a budding writer who would later make his mark under the pseudonym of Stendhal. Another survivor, a young French officer, was so devoted to his horse that, throughout the retreat, he risked his life nightly in search of food for it. Often, under the cloak of darkness and at great peril, he stole into Cossack camps to obtain fodder. Both returned to France.

The loss of life during the Campaign of 1812 was tragic. In addition to the French dead, the Russians lost over 200,000. For the French, the outcome dealt a blow that would take decades from which to recover. For Russia, the defeat of the invaders brought glory to Alexander and his nation, one that was to reverberate through the land for decades.

ANN PANAGULIAS
Soprano

Natasha Rostova

Ann Panagulias, a 1988 Adler Fellow with the San Francisco Opera Center, scored a storybook success in the title role of Berg's Lulu in 1989, singing the demanding role for the first time. She made her Company debut in 1988 in Parsifal and was also featured in the Schwabacher Debut Recital series. Since then, she has been seen here as Mrs. Naidoo in the Philip Glass Satyagraha, as Woglinde in Das Rheingold and Götterdämmerung for the 1990 Ring cycle, in a San Francisco Opera-sponsored concert with Plácido Domingo at the Civic Auditorium, and as Cinna in this summer's concert version of Mozart's Lucio Silla. A 1986 Merola Opera Program participant, she is also a veteran of many tours with Western Opera Theater and of many Opera Center performances. These included roles such as Fortuna in Handel's Giustino, Mimì in La Bohème, and Norina in Don Pasquale. A popular concert soloist, she has appeared with the symphonies of San Francisco, Detroit, Honolulu and San Jose. The American artist's most recent engagements include her acclaimed European debut at La Fenice in Venice in the title role of a new production of Lulu, the title role of L'Incoronazione di Poppea at Montpellier, and Fiordiligi in Così fan tutte in Bordeaux.

ELENA ZAREMBA
Mezzo-Soprano

Hélène Bezukhova

Elena Zaremba's parents were both singers, and as a child she attended a specialist music school to study piano. Later studies were at the Faculty of Singing at the Gneisin State Music Teacher Training School. While still a fifth-year student, she was invited to sing as a soloist at the Bolshoi Theater, where she has continued to appear in such operas as Prince Igor, Eugene Onegin, Cavalleria Rusticana, The Marriage of Figaro, The Golden Cockerel, Das Rheingold, Boris Godunov, and in new productions of Mlada, Rigoletto, and Queen of Spades. She has appeared with the Bolshoi company abroad in Paris, Japan, South Korea, Germany, and at Milan's La Scala. Last year she made her Royal Opera, Covent Garden, debut as Konchakovna in Prince Igor. Miss Zaremba is making her U.S. opera company debut with San Francisco Opera in War and Peace, having appeared on the East Coast with the Bolshoi Opera on tour. Future plans include performing Carmen in Munich (1992) and Paris (1993/1994).

IRINA BOGACHOVA
Mezzo-Soprano

Marya Akhrosimova

A soloist with the Kirov Theater since 1963, Miss Bogachova was admitted to that company while still a student at the Leningrad Conservatory. Winner of the Grand Prix gold medal at the International Vocal Competition in Rio de Janeiro, she takes part in many jury panels at various international competitions. She is now a faculty member of the Leningrad Conservatory. The mezzo-soprano's debut role at La Scala, Milan, was that of Ulrica in Un Ballo in Maschera. Her repertoire includes Amneris in Aida, Azucena in Il Trovatore, the title role of Carmen, Charlotte in Werther, Marina in Boris Godunov, Marfa in Khovanshchina, Lyubasha in The Tsar's Bride, the Countess in The Queen of Spades, Akhrosimova in War and Peace, and Babulenka in The Gambler. She has appeared as a guest artist in Italy, France, England, Switzerland, Greece, Spain, and in the United States as Marina in Boris Godunov at San Diego in 1989. War and Peace marks this artist's San Francisco Opera debut. Miss Bogachova is a "Peoples' Artist" of the USSR as well as the recipient of the USSR State Prize and the State Prize of the Soviet Union's Russian Republic.

CATHERINE KEEN
Mezzo-Soprano

Sonya

A 1989-90 Adler Fellow with the San Francisco Opera Center and a Merola Opera Program participant in 1987 and 1988, Catherine Keen made her Company debut in the summer of 1989 as Kasturbai in Satyagraha, and has since sung numerous major roles at the War Memorial. Miss Keen made her European debut in 1989 with the Deutsche Oper Berlin as Dalila in Samson et Dalila, and was soloist with the Cincinnati Symphony in performances of El Amor Brujo. A Schwabacher Debut recitalist earlier this year, she recently appeared as soloist with the Sacramento Symphony in Prokofiev's Alexander Nevsky and in concerts at the Carmel Bach Festival. She has appeared as soloist with the San Francisco Symphony, Indianapolis Symphony, Columbus Symphony, Sinfonia San Francisco, and at the Cincinnati May Festival and the Hollywood Bowl Festival.

JANE MARSH
Soprano

Madame Peronskaya

A native of San Francisco and a former member of the Merola Opera Program, Jane Marsh made her professional debut as Desdemona in Otello at Spoleto, Italy, and was the first singer to win the Gold Medal at Moscow's Tchaikovsky Competition. She made her U.S. debut with the San Francisco Opera as Pamina in The Magic Flute. Subsequent roles sung here included Liù in Turandot, Micaëla in Carmen, and Anne Trulove in The Rake's Progress. She has since appeared at the major opera houses in Italy, Germany, Holland and Spain, as well as at the important international music festivals. Miss Marsh has also performed as soloist in numerous concerts world-wide with such noted conductors as Leinsdorf, Ozawa, Maazel, Kubelik, Blomstedt, Ormandy, Pritchard and Karajan. Acclaimed as a stylish interpreter of the music of Handel, she was the recipient of New York City's "Handel Medal" for special contribution to the world of music.

JACALYN BOWER
Mezzo-Soprano

Princess Marya Bolkonskaya

Jacalyn Bower made her first appearance with San Francisco Opera last fall as Ericlea in Il Ritorno d'Ulisse in Patria. The American artist made her Metropolitan Opera debut in Die Walküre during the 1987 season, also returning that year to Seattle for her fourth consecutive season as Erda, the First Norn and Waltraute in the Ring cycle. Engagements the following seasons include her first Brangäne in Tristan und Isolde in Barcelona, Margret in Wozzeck at Los Angeles, a debut at Geneva in Elektra, and a return to the Met for her fourth consecutive season in Die Walküre. An accomplished soloist, she has appeared with many U.S. orchestras and was heard in an all-Schönberg recital in New York's Weill Recital Hall.

OLGA MARKOVA-MIKHAILENKO
Mezzo-Soprano

Matryosha, the Gypsy Girl

Olga Markova-Mikhailenko, who completed her studies at the Kiev Conservatory in 1989, makes her American and San Francisco Opera joint debuts as the Gypsy Girl, Matryosha. Following fulfillment of her studies, the mezzo-soprano was active at the Kiev Theater of Opera and Ballet. In 1990, she joined the Leningrad Kirov Theater as a soloist. Included in Miss Markova-Mikhailenko's repertoire are the roles of Blanche in Prokofiev's The Gambler, Matryosha, her San Francisco Opera role, in Prokofiev's War and Peace, and Vlasyevna in Rimsky-Korsakov's The Maid of Pskov.

PATRICIA RACETTE
Soprano

Dunyasha, the Rostov Chamber Maid

Patricia Racette, a 1989-90 Adler Fellow with the San Francisco Opera Center, made her Company debut in 1989 as Mistress Ford in the family performance of Falstaff, and also performed in Aida, Idomeneo and Die Frau ohne Schatten. She appeared as Anastasio in the Opera Center's 1989 production of Handel's Giustino, and was seen last summer as Freia in Das Rheingold and Helmwige in Die Walküre in SFO's Ring cycle: Last fall she appeared here as Sister Osmina

War and Peace/Synopsis

ACT I

Scene 1—Prince Andrei Bolkonsky, a guest of the Rostov family, is meditating on the rebirth of nature in spring. He compares the oak tree which he saw in the forest, with its twisted, gnarled branches, to the hopelessness he feels about his life. He then hears the voices of Natasha Rostova and her cousin Sonya in the room above. Like him, the two girls cannot sleep, but are moved by the beauty of the spring evening. Andrei is enchanted by the romantic situation and by Natasha's voice, innocence and charm.

Scene 2—At a ball in St. Petersburg are Count Rostov and Natasha, their friends Pierre and Hélène Bezukhov, Hélène's brother Anatol Kuragin, his friend Lieutenant Dolokhov, and Andrei. Tsar Alexander I honors the occasion with his presence. Pierre urges Andrei to dance with Natasha. As they dance, Andrei recognizes her as the girl whose voice had so fascinated him. He falls in love with Natasha and determines to have her as his wife. But Anatol is also impressed by Natasha and begins to plan his campaign of seduction.

Scene 3—In Nicolai Bolkonsky's mansion, the servants gossip that the old man, Andrei's father, is ill-tempered and refuses to accept his son's betrothal to Natasha. When she and her father appear, they are received by Marya, Andrei's sister, who treats Natasha with hypocritical friendliness. Old Bolkonsky enters and contemptuously talks to her. Natasha realizes that it was on his father's orders that Andrei was forced to go abroad for a year. Refusing to listen to Marya's words a moment longer, she hurries out with as much dignity as she can muster.

Scene 4—At the Bezukhov house, Hélène, Pierre's wife, congratulates Natasha on her betrothal to Andrei. But she nevertheless tries to interest her in her brother, Anatol, who is in love with her. Count Rostov seeks to cut the evening short and take Natasha home, but Hélène will not have it, and whisks him away to hear the latest about Napoleon. Anatol arrives and pours his heart out to Natasha. He kisses her despite her protests and slips a love-note into her hand. Natasha, now deeply moved by Anatol's ardor, is scolded by Sonya. Count Rostov returns to take Natasha and Sonya home.

Scene 5—Anatol tells his friend Dolokhov of his scheme to elope with Natasha and take her abroad. Dolokhov tries to convince him not to, but fails. Anatol, inflamed with love, seems determined to risk it all and finds an accomplice in the coachman Balaga, a good-natured fellow ready to do anything out of loyalty to his master. Anatol says farewell to Moscow and to his mistress, the young Gypsy, Matryosha.

Scene 6—At Akhrosimova's, where the Rostovs are staying, Natasha is awaiting Anatol, but when he arrives, he is refused entry by a footman, for Madame Akhrosimova had learned about the planned elopement from Sonya. Natasha explains that she has secretly broken off her engagement with Andrei out of love for Anatol who, she insists, is a most honorable man. Pierre arrives and Akhrosimova tells him what has happened. Pierre reveals to Natasha the truth: Anatol is already married. Moved by Natasha's distress, Pierre confesses that were he free, he would propose to her himself. Overcome with remorse for her infidelity to Andrei, Natasha attempts suicide.

Scene 7—Hélène is entertaining friends, among whom is Anatol and a French doctor, Métivier, who tells how old Prince Bolkonsky had once thrown him out of the house, accusing him of being a French spy. Pierre arrives and attacks his brother-in-law for his conduct, insisting that he leave Moscow immediately. Anatol, taken aback by his vehemence, agrees, leaving Pierre alone to reflect on the pointlessness of his existence and the amoral climate existing in his household. His thoughts are interrupted by the arrival of his friend Denisov, who announces that Napoleon has invaded Russia, and that war has begun.

Epigraph—The Russian people stand united in declaring their resolve to defend their motherland.

ACT II

Scene 8—As the Russian armies prepare for battle, Denisov explains to Andrei his plans for a guerrilla attack. The troops praise Marshal Kutuzov, the leader of the Russian armies. The meeting with Denisov, who was once engaged to Natasha, brings Andrei's thoughts back to the memory of the girl. Pierre appears and explains that he has come to Borodino as a mere onlooker. Two Prussian generals pass by, exchanging philosophical reflections on war. Kutuzov arrives, full of admiration for his people, and asks Andrei to be a member of his staff. But Andrei refuses, insisting that his place is at the front, where the battle has finally begun.

Scene 9—At the French command post, on the redoubt of Shevardino, Napoleon watches the battle. He is already imagining himself in Moscow, with a delegation of citizens offering him the keys to the city. But his aides-de-camp bring news of defeat, of disastrous French losses. In spite of the urgent requests from his marshals, he refuses at first to commit his reserves, but eventually gives in. Napoleon cannot understand why victory is no longer in his grasp.

Scene 10—Marshal Kutuzov, surrounded by his generals, is holding a council of war in the village of Fili, not far from Moscow. They debate whether to defend or abandon Moscow. Despite the advice of his staff, Kutuzov decides to evacuate the city, convinced that the people will stand firm against the occupying French and ultimately drive them out. The generals leave and Kutuzov laments the fate of Moscow but expresses his faith in the Russian people.

Scene 11—Moscow is under French occupation. The Muscovites are starting to evacuate the city. Among them is Pierre, who would like to encounter Napoleon and kill him. To the amazement of the French generals, fires break out all over the city. Several arsonists are arrested and shot. Pierre is taken, too, but Marshal Davout decides to spare his life. A soldier, Platon Karatayev, who is as sad as anyone about the fate of the city, is reassured about the future. Meanwhile, chaos spreads throughout Moscow. Madmen escape from an asylum, while actors flee from a burning theater. Napoleon enters and surveys the city in flames around him. A group of Muscovites proclaim their resolve to avenge the people and their country.

Scene 12—Inside a hut near Moscow, Andrei, who has been wounded, is delirious with fever. In his lucid moments he thinks of Natasha, who suddenly enters and begs his forgiveness for betraying him. Overjoyed at seeing her again, Andrei bears no resentment toward her. As they renew their vows of love, he lapses back into delirium and dies in Natasha's arms.

Scene 13—The French are in full retreat. Ramballe and Bonnet, French officers, assess the extent of the defeat. With the French troops are prisoners, among them Pierre and Platon. The latter, exhausted and unable to go on, is executed. A detachment of Russian partisans, led by Denisov, successfully attack the French column and free Pierre and the other prisoners. They learn that the French army has been routed and that Moscow is once again free. Marshal Kutuzov arrives and praises the people for their courage. The people in turn praise the eternal Russian spirit in a chorus of solemn joy and thanksgiving.

DIMITRI KHARITONOV
Baritone

Prince Andrei Bolkonsky

A leading baritone at Moscow's Bolshoi Theater since 1985, Kharitonov began at an early age to study piano, composition and voice, continuing at the Leningrad State Conservatory of Music and the Nezhdanova State Conservatory of Music, Odessa. In 1984 he received a teaching diploma as well as diplomas for vocal studies, composition, and piano. Thereafter he became Principal Baritone of the Odessa State Opera Theater. Kharitonov has been the winner of numerous U.S.S.R. and international competitions. His Bolshoi Theater roles have included Germont in La Traviata, Count Di Luna in Il Trovatore, Figaro in Il Barbiere di Siviglia, The Prologue and Silvio in Pagliacci, the title role in Eugene Onegin, Prince Yeletsky in Queen of Spades, Duke Robert in Iolanta, the title role in Tsar Saltan, and Fernando in Mazeppa. In 1989, he made his European debut at the Edinburgh Festival singing Jokanaan in Salome. Further international engagements have included the Maggio Musicale in Florence, Lyric Opera of Chicago, the Glyndebourne Festival, and the English National Opera. The baritone appeared in the "Arias For Peace" concerts in 1990 and makes his San Francisco Opera debut in War and Peace. He is also scheduled for Escamillo in this season's Carmen.

BARRY McCAULEY
Tenor

Pierre Bezukhov

A Merola Opera Program participant in 1975 and '76, and an Affiliate Artist with the Company in 1977 and '78, Barry McCauley made his 1977 San Francisco Opera debut with three roles: the title role of Faust for the student / family performances, Vanya in Katya Kabanova, and Froh in Das Rheingold. Subsequent appearances here have been Edgardo in Lucia di Lammermoor and Alwa in the 1989 presentation of Lulu. He is frequently engaged by the leading theaters of the U.S. and Europe and has appeared in leading roles at the Paris Opera, Metropolitan Opera, Deutsche Oper Berlin, Netherlands Opera, Lyric Opera of Chicago, Vancouver Opera, Berlin Staatsoper, Santa Fe Opera, the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels, and New York City Opera and is a frequent performer at major international music festivals. McCauley recently sang Don José in Carmen in Marseille and Toronto, Maurizio in Adriana Lecouvreur in Trieste, and undertook the title role of Parsifal for the first time with the Netherlands Opera.

PAUL PLISHKA
Bass

Marshal Kutuzov

One of the world's foremost singers, Paul Plishka made his 1976 San Francisco Opera debut as Padre Guardiano in La Forza del Destino, and has since returned to sing Silva in Ernani, Méphistophélès in Faust, Zaccaria in Nabucco and, most recently, Rocco in Fidelio. A leading member of the Metropolitan Opera roster since 1967, he also appears regularly with major opera companies in North American cities such as Chicago, Philadelphia, Houston, Pittsburgh, Dallas, San Diego, Toronto, Ottawa and Vancouver. In Europe he has performed in Munich, Barcelona, Vienna, Berlin, Zurich, at Milan's Teatro alla Scala, London's Covent Garden, Hamburg's Staatsoper and the Paris Opera. He has also appeared with the orchestras of New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Toronto and Cleveland, among many others, and at the festivals in Salzburg and Spoleto. The American artist has an extensive discography, and his recording of the Verdi Requiem with the Atlanta Symphony conducted by Robert Shaw won a Grammy award for the best classical album of 1988.

YURI MARUSIN
Tenor

Anatol Kuragin

While still a student, Marusin joined the troupe of the Leningrad Maly Theater where he mastered the highly varied repertoire of Levko in Rimsky-Korsakov's May Night, the Water Sprite in Tchaikovsky's Iolanta, the title role of Don Carlo, Rodolfo in La Bohème, Cavaradossi in Tosca, and Pinkerton in Madama Butterfly. Since 1982 he has appeared as soloist with the Kirov Theater, where his portrayal of Lensky in a new production of Eugene Onegin gained him the State Prize of the USSR. In the last few years, the tenor's repertoire has expanded to Gherman in The Queen of Spades, the Duke in Rigoletto, the title role of Faust, Edgardo in Lucia di Lammermoor, Alvaro in La Forza del Destino, Dimitri in Boris Godunov, Alfredo in La Traviata, and Gritzko in Mussorgsky's Fair at Sorochinsk. Having become a member of Milan's La Scala in 1977, his success there includes receiving the gold medal as the best foreign singer of the 1981 season for his portrayal of Gabriele Adorno in Simon Boccanegra. He holds the title of "Peoples' Artist" in the USSR. A guest performer in the United States, Italy, Germany, and Austria, Marusin is making his San Francisco Opera debut.

DALE TRAVIS

A 1988-89 Adler Fellow with the San Francisco Opera Center and a member of the Merola Opera Program in 1986 and '87, Dale Travis has appeared with the Company in numerous roles since his 1988 debut. They include Lord Krishna in Satyagraha, the Chief Bandit in Don Quichotte, Frank in the Family Performance of Die Fledermaus and, this summer, Don Alfonso in Così fan tutte. Opera Center credits include Don Alfonso, the three bass roles in La Bohème and the title role of Don Pasquale for Western Opera Theater's 1987-88 tour. Travis has also appeared with Marin Opera, San Jose Opera, the Opera Festival of New Jersey, and at the Carmel Bach Festival, and has sung in concert with the San Francisco Symphony and Sacramento Symphony.

PHILIP SKINNER
Bass-baritone

Dolokhov

In his seventh consecutive season with San Francisco Opera, Philip Skinner has appeared here in over 20 different operas in such roles as Ferrando in Il Trovatore, Méphistophélès in the student/family performances of Faust, Colline in the family performance of La Bohème, Don Diego in L'Africaine and, last fall, Monterone in Rigoletto and Count Horn (Sam) in Un Ballo in Maschera. He participated in the 1985 Merola Opera Program and went on to tour with Western Opera Theater in the title role of Don Giovanni. He was a 1986-87 Adler Fellow and appeared in several Opera Center Showcase productions. He has sung with many U.S. opera companies and made an acclaimed debut last year with Houston Grand Opera in the title role of Le Nozze di Figaro. The recipient of a London/Sullivan grant from OPERA America, Skinner was a Schwabacher Debut recitalist last season.

NIKITA STOROJEV
Bass

Count Rostov
General Rayevsky

Nikita Storojev made his San Francisco Opera debut last fall as Count Ribbing (Tom) in Un Ballo in Maschera. He was principal bass soloist at the Bolshoi Opera from 1977 to 1981, also appearing with the Moscow Philharmonic and on Soviet radio and television. After singing principal roles of the Russian repertory throughout the USSR, he began his international career in Mexico in 1981, singing the four villains in The Tales of Hoffmann. He made his Vienna Staatsoper debut in 1982 as Ramfis in Aida, and became a permanent member of the Düsseldorf Opera in 1983, singing major roles there for three years. He has since been acclaimed in Paris, Rome, Nice, Strasbourg, Mannheim, Graz, Venice, Toronto, London, Amsterdam, Washington, D.C., and New York. Storojev has numerous recording credits, and has been honored with the "Golden Diapason" award in Paris, and the "Choc de la Musique" prize in 1988.

ALEXANDRE NAOUMENKO
Tenor

Platon Karatayev

Alexandre Naoumenko was born in Lipetsk, USSR, and is a graduate of the Moscow Tchaikovsky Conservatory. He also studied at the International Bach Academy in Stuttgart and at the Britten-Pears School at Aldeburgh. A finalist in the 1989 Toulouse International Singers' Competition, he has appeared throughout the Soviet Union and England, as well as in Paris, Brussels and Stuttgart, performing the roles of Alfred in Die Fledermaus, Lensky in Eugene Onegin, Don Juan in Dargomyzhsky's The Stone Guest, and Dr. Caius in Falstaff. Concert appearances include Bach's Christmas Oratorio for Radio Moscow, Mozart's Requiem and Mussorgsky's The Marriage for Moscow television, as well as War and Peace with the VARA Radio Orchestra led by Edo de Waart in Amsterdam. He has recorded Fleischmann's Rothschild's Violin (arranged by Shostakovich), and Bach's Phoebus and Pan cantata. Naoumenko most recently sang Dr. Caius at Aldeburgh, and Don José in Carmen in Chelmsford, England.

VALERY ALEXEIEV
Baritone

Napoleon

A soloist at Leningrad's Kirov Theater since 1984, Alexeiev completed the Conservatory in Novosibirsk in 1977, subsequently appearing at the opera theaters of Krasnoyarsk and Voronezh. He is a winner of numerous competitions, whose repertoire encompasses the title role of Tchaikovsky's Mazeppa, Tomsky in The Queen of Spades, Rangoni in Boris Godunov, Shaklovity in Khovanshchina, the title role of Prince Igor, Count di Luna in Il Trovatore, the title role of Rigoletto, Valentin in Faust, the title role of Don Giovanni, Marquis di Posa in Don Carlo, and Iago in Verdi's Otello. He has appeared as guest artist at the Verona Arena, in Sofia and Wiesbaden, and with the Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam. He holds the title of "Artist of Merit" conferred by the Soviet Union's Russian Republic. This is the baritone's U.S. opera debut.

GENNADI BEZUBENKOV
Bass

A member of the 1983 Merola Opera Program, he sang the title role in the Stern Grove performances of The Tales of Hoffmann and Pinkerton in Madame Butterfly, a role he also performed on Western Opera Theater's 1983 tour. As an Adler Fellow with the S.F. Opera Center for two years, Harper sang the role of Grimaldo in Handel's Rodelinda for the 1985 Showcase series, and that same year made his debut with the San Francisco Symphony as tenor soloist in the Verdi Requiem. A graduate of North Park College in Illinois, he has extensive concert credits in the U.S., as well as a recording of Schoenberg's Moses und Aron with the Chicago Symphony.

ROSS HALPER
Tenor

Prince Andrei
Bolkonsky's Orderly
Third Madman

This versatile tenor, also active as a stage director, writer and translator of opera, has specialized in comic and character roles by Chabrier, Argento, Prokofiev, Cavalli and Weill, among others. He has sung with Sacramento Opera, Arizona Opera, Eugene (Oregon) Opera, and with Sinfonia San Francisco, the Carmel Bach Festival, and the symphonies of San Jose, Marin, Oakland and Berkeley. The Bay Area resident makes his San Francisco Opera debut as Bolkonsky's Orderly and the Third Madman.

VALERY GERGIEV
Conductor

War and Peace at Leningrad's Kirov Theater of Opera and Ballet, 1978, provided an auspicious debut for Valery Gergiev who, ten years later, was unanimously chosen to become that theater's Chief Conductor. Now also Principal Guest Conductor of the Rotterdam Philharmonic, the Moscow-born conductor studied at Leningrad's Rimsky-Korsakov Conservatory under the renowned Ilya Musin, winning the All-Union Conductors Competition in Moscow while still a student. At age 23, he won the Karajan prize at the International Conductors Competition in West Berlin. In 1989, in celebration of Mussorgsky's 150th birthday anniversary, the maestro led, to great company and personal acclaim, a comprehensive Kirov Mussorgsky festival which included all five operas, orchestral, chamber and vocal works. This successful festival was repeated in Edinburgh just this summer. In 1990, Gergiev led a production of Boris Godunov (by the late, famed Russian director Andrei Tarkovsky) which was televised by the BBC and presented at the Kirov. An upcoming Kirov Prokofiev festival, from December 1991 to January 1992, has enlisted the cooperation of Covent Garden, the Opéra de Bastille of Paris, the BBC and Philips Classical Records. War and Peace, The Gambler, Fiery Angel, and Love For Three Oranges will be presented along with ballets, symphonies, an oratorio and a cantata. Equally engaged in orchestral repertoire, the maestro has conducted the symphony orchestras of London, Boston, Chicago, Bavarian Radio and San Francisco, where his October 1990 debut followed an American debut with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood and the Chicago Symphony at Ravinia. He has also appeared with the New York, Berlin, Japan, BBC, Dresden, Netherlands, and Royal Philharmonic Orchestras and has recorded for RCA with the London Symphony. Now under exclusive contract with Philips Classics, he has recently completed Mussorgsky's Khovanshchina and Prokofiev's Romeo and Juliet. Maestro Gergiev leads War and Peace in his U.S. opera debut.

ALEXANDER ANISIMOV
Conductor, October 2nd

Currently Music Director of the Minsk Opera, Alexander Anisimov initiated his conducting career more than 17 years ago in Leningrad, having studied at both the Leningrad and Moscow Conservatories. His repertoire now encompasses nearly 40 operas and ballets. He has conducted opera and ballet at the Maly Theater in Leningrad since 1975. As Conductor-in-Chief of the Byelorussian Bolshoi Theater, a position he has held since 1980, Anisimov led performances of Nutcracker and Glinka's Ivan Susanin which were recorded and shown to national and international television audiences. In Perm, he led the first-ever U.S.S.R. production of Prokofiev's The Fiery Angel. As Perm's opera and ballet Conductor-in-Chief, he took part in the staging of 10 new opera productions. The conductor continues to work extensively with young people, having assisted in the preparation of a Tchaikovsky Competition First Prize winner, and has been invited to sit on a prestigious competition jury. San Francisco Opera's War and Peace presents the conductor in his United States debut.

JÉRÔME SAVARY
Director

Born in Argentina, Savary studied music and decorative arts in Paris. With interests which embrace all aspects of the performing arts, he founded the Grand Magic Circus in 1965. He directed the Centre Dramatique National du Languedoc-Roussillon in Beziers and Montpellier from 1982 to 1985, then the Carrefour Européen du Théâtre in Lyon from 1986 to 1988, undertaking the direction of the Théâtre Chaillot, Paris, in 1988. Regularly engaged by La Scala in Milan, the Grand Théâtre in Geneva, the Volksoper in Vienna, the Opéra de Paris, Savary has directed Mozart's Don Giovanni and Magic Flute, Rossini's Barber of Seville, Italian Girl in Algiers, and Count Ory, Stravinsky's L'Histoire du Soldat, Offenbach's Tales of Hoffmann, La Vie Parisienne, and La Belle Hélène, Lehar's Merry Widow, and the world premiere of Corghi's Blimunda. Current projects are his United States debut with these performances of War and Peace, Verdi's Attila and Auber's Fra Diavolo at La Scala, Italian Girl in Algiers for Berlin's Deutsche Oper, and Carmen for the Bregenz Festival.

MICHEL LEBOIS
Set Designer

Michel Lebois has collaborated since 1966 with director Jérôme Savary both as a designer and as a performer, and is a founding member of the "Grand Magic Circus." His design credits include La Périchole in Hamburg and Geneva; The Merry Widow, Voyage to the Moon, and La Vie Parisienne in Geneva; Don Giovanni in Rome; A Soldier's Story in Milan; The Merry Widow and The Magic Flute in Vienna; the Bregenz Festival's The Magic Flute and The Tales of Hoffmann; Blimunda at La Scala, Milan; A Midsummer Night's Dream for the 1990 Avignon Festival and the Théâtre Chaillot, Paris; and Attila for La Scala, Milan. Future projects include Nuits des Rois for Verona, Marilyn Montreuil for the Théâtre Chaillot, and Die Fledermaus for Geneva. Lebois makes his U.S. opera debut with War and Peace.

JACQUES SCHMIDT
Costume Designer

A high fashion designer, Schmidt has been involved with the theater since 1952. Besides creating his own studio (1954-1972), he directed the costume studio of the Théâtre National Populaire de Villeurbanne between 1972 and 1984, collaborating in all productions of Roger Planchon. He has worked regularly also with Jean-Pierre Vincent and Patrice Chéreau. Opera productions he has costumed include Chéreau's Italian Girl in Algiers (Spoleto), The Tales of Hoffmann (Paris), The Ring (Bayreuth, 1976-1980), Lulu (Paris), Lucio Silla (Milan, Brussels, Paris), and Savary's Don Giovanni (Rome), Barber of Seville (Strasbourg), The Tales of Hoffmann (Bregenz), Count Ory (Lyon), and Blimunda (Milan). This is Schmidt's U.S. debut.

EMMANUEL PEDUZZI
Costume Designer

Designer Peduzzi met designer Jacques Schmidt in 1977 while working at the film production of Perceval le Gallois. Since that time, they have collaborated on approximately 50 productions. In addition to theatrical productions for Strasbourg and Théâtre de la Ville, Théâtre de L'Atelier, and Théâtre Chaillot in Paris, Peduzzi has designed for operatic stagings of Les Troyens in Zurich, Rameau l''Enchanteur in Bordeaux, and Genoveva in Montpellier. This is his United States opera debut.

VICTORIA MORGAN
Choreographer

Victoria Morgan, who created the dances for last fall's productions of Don Quichotte and Un Ballo in Maschera, is in her fourth year as Ballet Mistress for San Francisco Opera. She was a principal dancer with San Francisco Ballet and Ballet West, and performed lead roles in ballets choreographed by George Balanchine, Michael Smuin and Lew Christensen, as well as in pieces created by Jiri Kylian, Elisa Monte and William Forsythe. Miss Morgan has also choreographed works for the S.F. Ballet, Utah Ballet, Ruth Langridge Company, Mountain Play Theater, and S.F. Dance Theater, in addition to numerous television credits.

THOMAS J. MUNN
Lighting Designer

Thomas J. Munn, Lighting Director and Design Consultant for San Francisco Opera since 1976, has created the lighting and special effects for over 140 productions for the Company, including the highly acclaimed Ring cycle. As scenic adviser, he has designed scenery for SFO productions of Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk, Roberto Devereux, Pelléas et Mélisande, Billy Budd and Nabucco, as well as for this fall's revival of Don Giovanni. Munn has designed scenery and lighting for Broadway, Off-Broadway, regional theater, ballet, and films. His television credits include San Francisco Opera productions of La Gioconda (for which he received a 1979 Emmy Award), Samson et Dalila, Aida, L'Africaine, La Bohème, Orlando Furioso and Mefistofele. Credits for other companies include Madama Butterfly for the Netherlands Opera, and scenery and lighting for Hartford Ballet's productions of Coppélia and The Nutcracker.

Making War, Peace

By TIMOTHY PFAFF

"Working on this production of War and Peace fills me with great emotion," French director Jérôme Savary commented over a Saturday afternoon cocktail midway through the grueling weekend of August 17 and 18 — spent staging the whole of Prokofiev's sprawling, epic opera. "Being with this marvelous mixture of Russian and American singers is particularly moving considering how long these two peoples have been enemies. Beyond that, it is touching to watch War and Peace after witnessing the worldwide bankruptcy of communism.

"One of Tolstoy's great themes — one I hope to bring forward in my production — is the misery of war. It turns out that Tolstoy's view is very up to date, and I'm afraid I share his pessimistic philosophy that man will never change. Until very recently many people have been lulled back into the notion of `progress,' that with all the advances in society, war will soon become démodé. I think that is why the Gulf War came as such a shock to many people — the sudden realization that we are living in the midst of a great crisis, and that war has once again come close to us."

Staging Tolstoy's and Prokofiev's powerful scenes of the violent upheaval of war and its degrading aftermath, Savary had, over the previous few days, made frequent allusions to images still fresh from the war in the Gulf. Privately, he allowed that it was not lost on him that he, a Frenchman, was staging the story of the defeat of his own people, "and in a production with a Russian conductor! What makes it even more affecting for me is that one of my ancestors, a General Savary, is mentioned in Tolstoy's novel. I feel involved in this story in that it is part of French history, yet it is much larger even than that. The events told in this story happen on the very edge of world history. Europe has been designed in a different way ever since."

A scant two hours after the next day's rehearsals, it seemed that the world had advanced to that edge once again. The sudden, unexpected coup by the right-wing Soviet junta held world consciousness in a vise grip. Monday's rehearsal schedule slated a "Free Day" for the War and Peace team, but seldom could a group of artists (not to mention the rest of the international cast) have felt less free. At the deepest level, the very notion of freedom itself seemed again in jeopardy.

The shattering turn of events was not the only recent example of life's eerie predilection to imitate art. The day before the premiere of the new John Adams opera, The Death of Klinghoffer, in Brussels last spring, the European edition of the Wall Street Journal reported that the Palestinian terrorist who had masterminded the highjacking of the Achille Lauro had just been apprehended in Greece. But War and Peace, a substantially bigger opera, seemed this time to have conjured up a proportionately greater international incident. Somehow the word "coincidence" seemed as inadequate Monday as it has in the past in reference to the synchronicity at play in Prokofiev's contact with Tolstoy's great novel. The composer, who had long contemplated an opera based on War and Peace, had scarcely begun its composition when Hitler began his Napoleon-like invasion of the USSR in 1941.

A world nervously awaiting the response of the Soviet populace, only recently transformed by the realities of glasnost and the promise of democracy, might have been cheered to witness the resumption of rehearsals the following Tuesday. Some twenty Soviet artists had been assembled for this new production, and there was no mistaking their manifest concern about the tumultuous events in their homeland — both for the ways those far-away events might be affecting their loved ones and fellow citizens in the USSR and for the as-yet-unforeseeable consequences they would have for the artists themselves on their return home. Yet worries of the most agonizing kind seemed in no way to diminish the artists' commitment to the already overwhelming project at hand.

The loss, temporary as it turned out, of their country's first elected leader was to a perceptible degree offset by the arrival of their artistic leader, the charismatic young conductor Valery Gergiev, director of Leningrad's Kirov Theater, a musician in ascendancy throughout the Western world, and the prevailing interpreter of War and Peace. His revitalizing presence, and the intermittent interruptions by Opera staff members relaying news items as they broke, seemed to galvanize more than distract the artists whose very futures half way around the world were at stake. The distinctly American ring to the expression "The show must go on" took on an unforgettable new accent Tuesday. The collective high spirits that prevailed the next day, upon word of the junta's fall, similarly heightened, instead of interfering with, the pressing work under way.

From the moment the San Francisco Opera General Director Lotfi Mansouri conceived this production of War and Peace—at first, simply, as the obvious tribute to the Prokofiev centenary—Company administrators seized on the opportunity for a deliberate (if not formal) cultural exchange with Soviet artists — something along the lines of the Kirov-Covent Garden exchange that resulted in a recent, Gergiev-led co-production of War and Peace (in mid-July BBC-TV broadcast a live Kirov performance to the UK in advance of the Covent Garden revival) but with a decidedly American accent. The administrators' long-range thinking has embraced the ideas of comparable co-productions and the sending of American singers to participate in Soviet opera productions.

However uncertain the future of such planning remains, the enterprise could hardly have started more promisingly. Company Artistic Administrator Sarah Billinghurst flew to Hamburg to attend a concert performance of War and Peace under Gergiev's leadership. "After the performance," Billinghurst reports, "I made a list of some of the artists I thought we should invite. As it happened, Gergiev had also made a list. The two were identical." Hands-on administrators both, the two then worked out special contracts to accommodate the Soviet artists' special needs.

In retrospect, that proved to be far from the most difficult of Billinghurst's tasks. Casting an opera with 71 named characters poses problems of nightmarish proportions. "The job was incredibly complex," she continues. "It's common practice with War and Peace to give individual singers multiple small parts. But I learned you have to think beyond voice types and physical suitability for particular roles. I thought I had most of the smaller roles figured out when I realized that in a few cases the casting I had arranged wasn't practicable — there simply wasn't time for costume changes in some of the role doublings and triplings I had come up with. And then there's the matter of covers. It's logical to have singers of some of the smaller roles covering the principals — but in the event they have to go on, someone has to step in for them. So you have to have covers for covers. Casting War and Peace represents the difference between working a crossword puzzle and solving a Rubik's cube. You have to work in what amounts to three dimensions."

But if a full-fledged exchange of American and Soviet artists remains a prospect still in the offing, there was an important step in that direction as well. At Gergiev's urging, and with full Company support, soprano Ann Panagulias, the new production's Natasha, went to Leningrad to attend rehearsals and two performances of last summer's Kirov War and Peace. In addition to getting the flavor of a land she had not previously visited ("I pretended I was going to the opera's second-tableau ball as I approached Leningrad's famous palaces"), she had the rare opportunity of coaching her entire role with Tatyana Novikova, a famous Bolshoi Natasha, and working on her biggest scene with Gergiev himself.

"I wanted to know how Gergiev saw Natasha," the young soprano who has been in increasing international demand since her signal success with the title role in the Company's 1989 production of Lulu commented over a rehearsal break caffélatte. "He pointed out that the clue is in some of the first words she sings. She says she wants to fly, and her soul should be like a bird's. I'm reluctant to use the 'L' word, but she's like Lulu in significant ways. She's instinctual and unanalytical and doesn't question motives. Love is very important to her, and she wants the guy she loves to be right here — and now — and she doesn't understand why he is not.

"The hard thing about singing in Russian is figuring out where to place accents. What I learned is that Prokofiev worked from the stresses in the words, so working with two native speakers on the language proved invaluable in figuring out how to phrase her music. Interestingly, strains of the same music" — she sings a familiar phrase — "appear in almost all of her big scenes. Gergiev helped me find a range of colors to make that music specific to each aria.'"

Anyone involved in the preparation of this production at any level will confirm that its active cultural exchange had less to do with artists traveling east or west than with the tireless, unifying work of Susanna Lemberskaya. Beginning her twelfth season as a member of the Company's music staff this fall, the Soviet-born and -trained musician has worked on four productions of War and Peace ("I finally feel that the opera is `mine'"), the first in 1963 at Leningrad's Maly Theater under the conductor Grikurova, "a marvelous musician who had worked on the piece with Prokofiev himself." A central player in this new production from its inception, Lemberskaya has made invaluable contributions as coach (voice and diction), rehearsal pianist extraordinaire ("I hear a symphony," commented one rehearsal visitor hearing her for the first time), translator, and, in Billinghurst's apt summary, "the glue of this whole production." From the moment of Maestro Gergiev's arrival, she became his personal musical assistant—because the two speak the same language in every sense. Unlike that of a number of her colleagues, her work will not end when the curtain goes up on September 7. "I will be there every performance, coaching, working, worrying."

Fortunately for all, given the complexity of the work, the entire production team was unified in its approach to the mammoth opera. Its members agreed on mounting a "full" production of the sprawling work, all 13 tableaux, all four-plus hours of music. (There is no such animal as a "complete" War and Peace, since the composer, in his desperate, and ultimately thwarted, effort to get the opera past party censors and onto the stage in his lifetime, composed multiple versions of various tableaux and proposed a range of performing editions for both one- and two-evening formats.) And they were unanimous in their decision to set the action in the historical period of Tolstoy's great novel.

Costume designers Jacques Schmidt and Emmanuel Peduzzi, faced with one of the most daunting assignments in all of opera, opted for historical authenticity down to the finest detail. Similarly, set designer Michel Lebois recreated interiors and exteriors that are both visually compelling and period-specific.

Lebois faced an enormous challenge in that all of the opera's 13 tableaux take place in different settings — and there is virtually no music to "cover" scene changes. One obvious solution, a unit set, was used in Seattle Opera's summer 1990 War and Peace production — and judged both valid and theatrically effective by audiences and critics alike. Instead, Lebois divided the stage into distinct playing areas defined by a series of six sets of modular panels, three each extending from the wings at either side of the stage. With each set of panels capable of extension at one of three widths, individual "substages" are carved out of the total available playing space. The combination of the panels in various arrangements, a system of scrims at various stage depths, screens for lighting projections, and set walls and backdrops flown in from above the stage create a highly adaptable array of dramatic environments — and afford fluid efficiency in scene changes.

If the stage design sounds vaguely baroque in style — and does afford a range of perspectives comparable to that of baroque stagecraft — its visual character could hardly be more modern. "Cinematographic" is a word that surfaced often in discussions by the design team, and not at all accidentally. Some of Prokofiev's best as well as most famous music is to be found among his film scores (one of his "consultants" for War and Peace was no less than Sergei Eisenstein). The composer's artistic thinking was saturated in the new aesthetic possibilities afforded by the technical maturation of film in his day. The panels that define individual playing spaces in this new War and Peace have been designed to imitate the iris of the camera, to crop and display stage pictures in particular, theatrically expressive ways.

An early indication of the panels' eventual importance was the problem they posed when they were not in place. On a bustling, crowded rehearsal stage, some performers tended to forget that lines of masking tape on the floor represent stage-high "walls." Seasoned principal singers, especially in the more intimate scenes of "Peace," the opera's first part, clearly knew exactly what the strips of masking tape represent. But, particularly for auxiliary choristers and supernumeraries, infrequent visitors to the opera stage, concentration on complicated blocking made walking through invisible walls all but second nature.

As though an opera with 71 named characters were not complicated enough, the forces involved in performing War and Peace include an augmented chorus and a small army of supernumeraries — 160 of them in the Company's new production. In the opera's heavily populated second part, "War," supers play, on the French side, Hussars, Gérard soldiers, Jacquot soldiers, gunners and an enclave of officers and, on the Russian side, Kutuzov officers, Ismailov guards, Cossacks, grenadiers, chasseurs, prisoners and even war casualties. Hearing a production assistant call for an assembly of "the dead" proved an occasion for mass merriment during the longueurs of one particularly trying staging rehearsal. More lasting, satisfying pleasures came when, seemingly miraculously, order emerged from what moments earlier seemed an intractable, teeming mob. It wasn't, of course, a miracle at all but, rather, teamwork at its most tightly synchronized. The moment a piece of completed blocking "took," assistant directors Laurie Feldman and Peter McClintock, stage manager Gretchen Mueller, and a sortie of assistant stage managers dashed to the various contingents enumerated above to plot movements and positions on paper.

The rehearsals (which, for the record, took place in five languages) proved to be collaborative at every level. Savary's explanation to the cast of the fourth tableau that Count Rostov's angry departure with Natasha would be shocking — and to register

The fashion industry has greeted the 1991-92 fall/winter collections from Rome with a renewed sense of excitement and passion which has not been felt in years.

Fashion editors everywhere are reporting that the new styles are original, fun and very flirtatious. This is certainly good news to an industry struggling with a sluggish economy and a continuing recession. Every designer, department store, boutique and retailer has had to rethink their position and approach to the growing number of cautious customers who are now looking at their wardrobes as no longer luxury items but long-term investments. Smart shoppers world-wide are demanding high quality, and designers and stores alike got the message. Says Rose Marie Bravo, CEO of I. Magnin, "As a result of the recession, leading designers have created secondary lines which are affordable and fashionable--i.e. Emanuel by Emanuel Ungaro, A Line by Anne Klein, Company by Ellen Tracy." Continued Bravo, "These new collections have filled the needs of today's consumer."

Evening styles are not only provocative and seductive, but extremely elaborate as well. Accents include the thick glitter of jeweled embroidery of bright colors and luscious fabrics and sensational textures of all types. "High quality workmanship is incorporated into designs which are deceptively simple--which makes them timeless," said one local department store buyer.

This fall, during San Francisco's annual charity fashion shows, runways were filled with elegant opening night evening dresses featuring everything from the conservative to the short and sassy. Entering the arena now are evening dresses with see-through skirts worn with leather bomber jackets--such as Karl Lagerfeld's newest designs for Chanel. The hemline is not only extremely short, or very long

Ryan Willson of Belvedere is pictured here with his fiancée Kimberly Quinlan-Bakker of Ross. Both are University of Southern California students majoring in communications and international business. For their night at the opera, Willson is sporting a black leather blazer with matching pleated leather pants, and Miss Quinlan-Bakker is wearing a black suede off-the-shoulder sequin dress. Both are from North Beach Leather, San Francisco. Miss Quinlan-Bakker's gold and amber drop earrings and braided gold fresh water pearls (Biwi) and gold bangle necklaces are by Sallie Bell Kelly.

Below: Businessmen Andrew McMicking Hall, of San Francisco and London,a nd his cousin Robert Anthony McHugh III, also of San Francisco, are long-standing lovers of the San Francisco Opera and prefer the casual elegance of Brooks Brothers' newest international suits for the young executive. Both styles shown here are double-breasted traditional suits. Hall is wearing a wool navy blue suit, and McHugh in gray wool. Both suits from Brooks Brothers, San Francisco.

Left: A recent communications graduate of San Francisco State, Monique Athearn, is elegantly dressed for the opera in her Escada multi-colored beaded and embroidered jacket with royal blue non-pleated satin trousers. Miss Athearn's jeweled drop earrings and matching necklace are also at Escada, San Francisco.

Right: San Francisco debutante and UC Berkeley student, Katherine Post, is looking sleek for her night at the opera in a Donna Karan black wool crepe side-slit column dress with a gold lycra shoulder. Miss Post's accessories are Donna Karan's brush gold cuff bracelets, earrings and black satin shoes, at I. Magnin, San Francisco.

University of Southern California business student, Marlene Marsten of San Francisco, who loves the opera, is wearing Chanel's newest beaded evening ensemble in green and black glitter tweed with a black transparent skirt worn with a black leather bomber jacket, and Chanel's black stain strap pumps.Miss Marsten's emerald, pearl and rhinestone earrings, chokers and emerald cuff bracelet are also at Chanel Boutique, San Francisco.

Chairman of the Opera's Opening Weekend Parade Walk and member of the San Francisco Opera Guild Board, Pam Valeski is wearing a short black Vicky Tiel chiffon dress, from Neiman-Marcus. and everything in between--but it includes pants as well.

The old truism has it that if the stock market is down, hemlines are up, and vice-versa. However, this year's international barometer seems to be a mixed bag of predictions. Stockbrokers are hard-pressed to explain the significance of such extremes, but they all agree that hemlines are as unpredictable as the fluctuations of the stock market.

Original styles of easy elegance are everywhere, to the relief of one Parisian fashion editor who recently declared an editorial au revoir to the old fashions of the "prim day dress, the severely tailored suit, and the traditional ball gown." Wrote another, "Luxury comes in other guises." Oui?

Operagoers have frequently been singled out as the most passionate music lovers in the world. With their unique mixture of passion for music, and the renewed passion for dress, this year's opera lovers should be as exciting to watch during intermission as the performance on stage. ❑ that shock — at first left his performers perplexed. When, with his resonant baritone and clear English, Nikita Storojev, the Rostov, intoned, "In this epoch, such a gesture could provoke a duel," the players got it instantly.

The sharply divergent directorial styles of Savary and Gergiev in the end proved complementary. "I prefer to work on the stage with living actors and what they bring to their roles rather than plotting it all out in advance at home," Savary explained. "I like to work like a painter, starting with colors over the whole canvas and then adding details by little touches. I find that technique allows me to get a global view of the entire staging in a short time."

Gergiev went for detail from his first encounters with both the orchestra and his cast, mining each measure and phrase for its maximum expressive potential. Recognizing the pitfalls latent in the sheer strength of Prokofiev's score, he repeatedly asked his musicians, players and singers alike, to search for the "variety" in the writing. "Don't push your bows, don't stop your bows," he cautioned string players during the music of the first tableau. "This is strong music, yes, but you can play it like Debussy, with lots of colors." "Cantabile" and "leggiero" were words that surfaced time and again. "It's clear what you do at forte, but you must also find your way to the piano passages. With this music, there is a strong danger to stay too much between mezzoforte and forte."

His work with the singers was, if anything, even more exacting. "Your singing is beautiful, very beautiful," he told Panagulias after the first phrases of her first-tableau duet with Sonya. "But it's a little too lyrical at this moment. This is a very young Natasha — and she is trying to wake people up. You can be more boisterous." Time and again he encouraged his singers to get a sense of speech into the singing line. "It is better for character."

Both men agree that one of the great marvels of the score is Prokofiev's capacity to imbue each of his many characters with a distinct and individual personality. "This composer can create a full character in five bars of music," Gergiev commented, fresh from a musical rehearsal in which he had demonstrated precisely that to no fewer than 20 singers, principals and comprimarii. "The most difficult thing about this opera is to create the characters, to find the right voice, the right style, the right emphasis. But the composer has provided all the material. The strength of Prokofiev is that he was able to compose in so many different genres. By the time of War and Peace, he had arrived at a new simplicity of expression, but the flexibility he acquired over the years allows for a world of expression. Sure, this is modern music, but there is within it the same capacity for emotional content — the potential for it to mean something — as we find in the scores of Tchaikovsky and Verdi.

"I don't attempt to do repertoire with which I am not in sympathy, and I must say that I love the music of Prokofiev," Gergiev added. "He is one of the handful of great opera composers of this century. His music, so important to Russian culture, needs much wider dissemination internationally. I don't say that other countries do not recognize this. It may be that there may have been more productions of Prokofiev operas in England than in the Soviet Union. But this music deserves dissemination to a wider international audience. It will only add to the respect that San Francisco Opera has throughout the world that it now undertakes this War and Peace. Doing this great opera is an act of enormous courage." ❑

San Francisco Opera is honored to acknowledge those individuals who, with special generosity and foresight, have included San Francisco Opera in their estate plans. By arranging to provide support to the endowment through bequests, charitable remainder trusts, the San Francisco Opera Pooled Income Fund, named funds and other planned gifts, Bel Canto Society members enable the Company to plan far into the future. At the same time, these gifts allow the Bel Canto Society member, during his or her lifetime, to make a statement of support that will ultimately become a lasting legacy to the Company.

We invite you to join the Bel Canto Society by notifying us that you have included San Francisco Opera in your estate plans. Please contact Barbara J. Dukas, Planned Giving Director, at (415) 565-6459 for further information.

"Do You Mean That San Francisco Opera Will Send Us Four Checks Every Year?"

Absolutely! When you make a life income gift to San Francisco Opera, you and/or someone you love will receive quarterly income payments every year for life. And the income you receive may very well be greater than the income you were previously earning from the securities you gave.

In addition, your life income gift gives you the benefit of an immediate income tax deduction and avoidance of capital gains tax liability. Above all, you will have the satisfaction of knowing that your gift will help to ensure the future of the Opera for many years to come.

If you would like to learn more about gifts which pay you an income, please contact:

Corporate Council

San Francisco Opera appreciates the generous support of the following businesses whose leadership contributions made for Performance Years 1990 or 1991 (recorded February 1, 1990 through July 15, 1991) are recognized through their membership in the Corporate Council. Donors of $2,000 and above are eligible for membership in the Corporate Council.

The San Francisco Opera Corporate Council includes Bay Area businesses and corporations that play an active role in the Opera. San Francisco Opera seeks to add new members to the Corporate Council so that it reflects the varied Bay Area business community. Council activities include participation in members-only dress rehearsals, numerous Council evenings at the Opera, and special behind-the-scenes glimpses into the world of opera. These benefits can be enjoyed by your business clients and employees.

Donor Categories and Benefits

Without the generous support of our Opera family it would be impossible for the San Francisco Opera to continue to produce first-rate opera. In addition to enjoying outstanding entertainment on stage, contributors to San Francisco Opera receive a number of benefits which enable them to observe many stages of opera production, to meet the artists and to have behind-the-scenes opportunities to participate in Opera life.

For information on becoming involved in these interesting and exciting donor benefits and services contact the Development Department (415) 565-6416.

Supporting San Francisco Opera

San Francisco Opera extends its most sincere appreciation to all those individual and foundation contributors who helped meet the Company's needs through gifts and pledges of $500 to $1,999 for Performance Years 1990 and 1991 (recorded February 1, 1990 through July 15, 1991). Space does not allow us to pay tribute to more than 13,000 others who help make each season possible.

Sennheiser Listening Devices

In order to increase the enjoyment of opera for hearing-impaired members of the audience, the War Memorial Opera House has installed a Sennheiser Listening System. Wireless headphones and induction devices (adaptable to hearing aids) are available in the coat check room at the south end of the main lobby. There is no charge, but an ID deposit, such as a driver's license or major credit card is required.

Opera House Tours

Sponsored by the San Francisco Opera Guild, tours of the War Memorial Opera House will be conducted every half hour from 10 a.m. to 12 noon weekdays and Saturdays, and from 10 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. Sundays on the following dates:

Saturday, October 12
Wednesday, October 16
Thursday, October 24
Saturday, November 2
Tuesday, November 5
Sunday, November 17
Wednesday, November 20
Sunday, December 1

Tickets for Guild members $2; non-Guild members $5. Advance reservations required. For further information, please call (415) 565-6433.

If You Drive To The Opera . . .

. . . and park in the Performing Arts Garage, remember that you can avoid some of the traffic congestion by using the Gough Street entrance to the facility (between Fulton and Grove).

SERVICES

Special service for SFO patrons! Many operagoers who live in the northern section of San Francisco are regular patrons of the Municipal Railway special "Opera Bus." This bus is added to Muni's north-bound 47 line following all evening performances of the Opera and all Sunday matinees. Look for the "47 Special," after each performance in the bus zone at Van Ness Avenue and Grove Street--across Van Ness from the Opera House. Its route is: North on Van Ness to Chestnut, left to Divisadero and left to Union. It continues on Union over Russian Hill to Columbus, then left to Powell--then right to the end of the line at North Point.

Food Service The lower lounge in the Opera House is open one and one-half hours prior to curtain time for hot buffet service. Patrons arriving before the front doors open will be admitted at the carriage entrance.
Refreshments are served in the box tier on the mezzanine floor, the grand tier and dress circle levels during all performances.

Emergency Telephone The telephone number 431-4370 may be used by patrons for emergencies only during performances. Before the performance, patrons anticipating possible emergencies should leave their seat number at the nurse's station in the lower lounge, where the emergency telephone is located.

Digital Watches Patrons are reminded to please check that their digital watch alarms are switched to OFF before the performance begins.

Ticket Information San Francisco Opera Box Office, Lobby, War Memorial Opera House, Van Ness at Grove; open 10 A.M. to 6 P.M. Monday through Saturday. 10 A.M. through first intermission on all performance days. Phone charge (415) 864-3330 10 A.M. to 6 P.M. Monday through Saturday (VISA, American Express and MasterCard). Tickets are also available on a limited basis through BASS and STBS outlets.

Unused Tickets Subscribers who find they cannot use their tickets may make a worthwhile contribution to the San Francisco Opera by returning the tickets they will be unable to use to the Opera Box Office or by telephoning (415) 864-3330, 10 A.M. to 6 P.M. or (415) 565-6485, 6 P.M. to ten minutes before curtain. The value of the returned tickets is tax deductible for the subscriber. If the tickets are re-sold by the Box Office, the proceeds will be used to benefit the San Francisco Opera. However, donated tickets are not considered a fund drive contribution and are not applied toward member benefits.

Taxi Service Patrons needing a cab at the end of the performance should reserve one with the doorman at the taxi entrance before the end of the final intermission.

Performing Arts Center Tours Tours of the San Francisco Performing Arts Center include the Opera House, Davies Symphony Hall and Herbst Theatre and take place as follows: Mondays, 10:00-2:30 on the hour and half hour. Davies Hall only: Wednesday, 1:30/2:30. Saturday 12:30/1:30. All tours leave from Davies Symphony Hall, Grove Street entrance. General $3.00--Seniors/Students $2.00. For information, please call (415) 552-8338.

For Lost and Found information, inquire at check room No. 3 or call (415) 621-6600, 8:30 to 11:30 Monday through Friday.

For the safety and comfort of our audience all large parcels, backpacks, luggage, etc., must be checked at the Opera House cloakrooms.

Opera glasses and Sennheiser listening devices are available in the lobby.

No cameras or tape recorders are permitted in the Opera House. Children of any age attending a performance must have a ticket.

Management reserves the right to remove any patron creating a disturbance.

Patrons, Attention Please! Fire Notice: There are sufficient exits in this building to accommodate the entire audience. The exit indicated by the lighted "EXIT" sign nearest your seat is the shortest route to the street. In case of fire please do not run—walk through that exit. (Refer to diagrams.)

HOW GOOD IS YOUR AGENT WITH NUMBERS?

When choosing a real estate company, the only number most sellers seem interested in hearing, naturally enough, is the highest one.

But before you list your property with the agent who recommends the highest asking price, consider this: A price too far above the real value often scares away qualified buyers. The property could take longer to sell. Worse yet, it could wind up selling for less than it might have, had it been listed correctly to begin with.

Simply put, the reality of overpricing often outweighs its allure.

At Hill & Co., we promise never to try to buy your listing by tempting you with an inflated estimate of your property's value.

We will, however, recommend the best price, after evaluating comparable properties, and applying an astute understanding of the differences between them.

But even more valuable, we offer our clients keen insights regarding San Francisco's most sought-after neighborhoods. After all, these neighborhoods have been our focus for more than 35 years.

So whether you're selling or buying property, it is well worth the extra effort to find a real estate agent who knows the numbers — everything from negotiating, to financing, lenders, title companies, deposits, and escrows. And of course, pricing.

While these issues may seem complex, there is a simple way to handle them. Call on the people who have proven their mastery of numbers in San Francisco time and time again: Hill & Co.

May we discuss some numbers? We look forward to the opportunity.
