A MESSAGE FROM THE CHAIRMAN AND PRESIDENT, SAN FRANCISCO OPERA ASSOCIATION

On behalf of the San Francisco Opera Association, we are pleased to welcome you to our Femmes Fatales Festival. We spent the past two summers in different venues, presenting La Bohème at the Orpheum Theatre and Madama Butterfly at the Golden Gate Theatre. In doing so, we gained a significant number of new audience members, with approximately 25,000 first-time opera-goers at the Bohème run and more than 24,000 at Butterfly. Indeed, our opera family has grown, and we hope to continue the trend by offering you new and innovative approaches to opera while maintaining the high standards that you expect from San Francisco Opera. Right now, it is a delight to be able to welcome our summer audience to the War Memorial Opera House.

Although the Company's financial position continues to be strong, ticket prices cover only half of our production costs. Today, more than ever, support of individuals, foundations and corporations is vital to the existence of San Francisco Opera. We acknowledge with great appreciation the generosity of Mrs. Paul L. Wattis, Chevron and Madeleine Haas Russell for helping us to present our Femmes Fatales Festival.

Just around the corner is our 76th season, which has been expanded to 10 operas and includes the world premiere of A Streetcar Named Desire, a San Francisco Opera commission. An extraordinary season awaits us, and we look forward to seeing you there.

REID W. DENNIS
CHAIRMAN

WILLIAM W. GODWARD
PRESIDENT

A MESSAGE FROM THE GENERAL DIRECTOR

The femme fatale has been celebrated in opera for hundreds of years, and our Femmes Fatales Festival offers you a brilliant sampler of great opera. From the exquisite, 17th-century baroque lyricism of Monteverdi's L'Incoronazione di Poppea, to the beloved romanticism of Bizet's Carmen and the provocative, 20th-century music of Berg's Lulu, you will embark on a musical adventure through time, led by the marvelous conductors Ralf Weikert, Patrick Summers and Alberto Maria Giuri.

Our femmes fatales live in vibrant worlds of drama and intrigue, each brought to life in our summer productions. A fascinating new virtual reality film sequence and new costumes by the celebrated fashion designer Bob Mackie enhance our acclaimed 1989 production of Lulu. The elegant grandeur of ancient Rome is re-created by Robert Perdziola in L'Incoronazione di Poppea. Our massive and very popular production of Carmen, created for our season at Bill Graham Civic Auditorium, has been refitted for the War Memorial Opera House stage.

As for singers, we'll encounter a superb group of international artists, with some in exciting debuts: Frederica von Stade performing her first Countess Geschwitz in Lulu; countertenor David Daniels, mezzo Lorraine Hunt and tenor Barry Banks taking Company bows in L'Incoronazione di Poppea; and soprano Andrea Dankova making her U.S. opera debut in Carmen.

The power of the femme fatale is a force to behold—enjoy the excitement!

Central, necessary, eternally

By MAX LOPPERS

During his short life, in a manner that now seems incomprehensible to us, Mozart continually encountered obstacles to his progress as a composer of operas. In his Memorie, written more than three decades after Mozart's death, Lorenzo da Ponte, the librettist of Le Nozze di Figaro, Don Giovanni and Così fan tutte, summarized the situation thus: "Gifted with talents perhaps superior to any other composer in the world past, present or future, (Mozart) had, thanks to the cabals of his enemies, never been able to exercise his divine genius in Vienna, and there remained unknown and obscure, a priceless jewel buried in the depths of the earth, its brilliance and splendor hidden from view."

Outside Vienna, Mozart's operas tended to be more justly appreciated. One particularly gratifying opportunity to revel in success came in Prague, to which he and his wife traveled a month after the local first performance of Le Nozze di Figaro, about six months after its Vienna premiere, on May 1, 1786. "Here," he reported to his father in a letter, "they talk about nothing but Figaro. Nothing is played, sung or whistled but Figaro. No opera is drawing like Figaro. Nothing, nothing but Figaro." In Vienna, though the opera had found some degree of favor (the first run was a respectable nine performances), it was soon exceeded in popularity by Martin's Una cosa rara (also to a libretto by Da Ponte), first performed six months later. In Prague, though, no opera, according to a local German-language newspaper, had "ever caused such a sensation . . . Connoisseurs who have seen (Figaro) in Vienna are anxious to declare that it was much better done here."

Even if in Vienna it would take a second production, in 1789, to win for Le Nozze di Figaro the acclaim it deserved, this was the opera which finally added Mozart to the list of leading opera composers of the day. Hind-sight, and the fitness and beauty of the nozze of music and drama that he and Da Ponte achieved, make one want to believe that it came into existence almost inevitably—"As fast as I wrote the words," the librettist relates, "he made music of them: in six weeks everything was in order" (it seems that his long-distance memory, generally suspected of inaccuracies or implausibilities, did not fail him here: according to recent scholarship it is entirely possible that the main composition of Figaro was undertaken in just this period of time).

The complete truth is rather different. Turning into an opera Beaumarchais's two-year-old play La Folle Journée, ou Le Mariage de Figaro took a great deal of time and much tricky negotiation to get underway. It had been Mozart's idea. According to Da Ponte, it was the composer who at their first meeting had suggested making an opera of the Beaumarchais sequel to his Barbier de Seville (1772). (A copy of Le Mariage de Figaro in a 1785 German translation was among the possessions catalogued after Mozart's death for a valuation of his estate.) This was a bold proposition: in this play, Beaumarchais puts in his characters' mouths stinging criticism of libertine aristocracy, particularly in the long fifth-act diatribe given to Figaro, which is filled with such (for the time) shocking pronouncements as "No, Monsieur Count, you would not have her [Suzanne] . . . Because you're a great lord, you consider yourself a great genius! Noble birth, income, rank, offices of state, all this makes a person so haughty! What have you done to acquire such riches? You gave yourself the discomfort of being born, nothing more: for the rest, you're a rather ordinary man!" This, and much else, had led to the play's suppression when it was completed, in 1781; only three years later did it reach the stage of the Comédie-Française in Paris, where it swiftly became one of the greatest triumphs in company history.

In Vienna, the Emperor, Joseph II, banned Le Mariage de Figaro for performance while granting permission for its publication in both the original language and the vernacular. But Mozart was set on it, and in fact began composing before permission for production was ever granted. Given the extreme unlikelihood of a commission materializing for an opera made of such volatile material, a mutual friend of Mozart's and Da Ponte's—Baron Raimund von Wetzlar, in whose house the two first met—offered to pay for the libretto and, if Vienna should prove impossible, seek out performance opportunities for the work in London or France. Da Ponte refused Wetzlar's "bella generosità": "I proposed to have words and music written secretly and to await a favorable opportunity to show (the opera) to the court theater directors or to the Emperor himself—the responsibility for the whole undertaking I bravely offered to shoulder myself." Soon after the opera was completed, the Memoirs tell us (and the reader swiftly learns to take them with a large pinch of salt), he achieved notable success in persuading the reluctant Emperor to let it be performed. After this, various plots attempting to kill off or in some way mar its eventual staging failed, above all—it seems—because of Da Ponte's sage counsel and, when required, quick-witted action, which Max Loppert, chief music critic of the London Financial Times from 1980 to 1996, is Associate Editor of Opera and writes for BBC Music Magazine, International Classical Record Collector, International Piano Quarterly, Gramophone, and the theater monthly Applause; he is also engaged on a life-and-works study of Gluck.

finally succeeded in steering his and Mozart's vessel into port.

This was the Burgtheater, theater of the Austrian court, which shortly before Mozart and Da Ponte made each others' acquaintance had been re-established as a home for Italian comic opera. In 1776—four years before his mother, Maria Theresia, died—Joseph had taken over its direction himself and immediately disbanded the resident company, thus putting an end to the long-running Viennese tradition of performing Italian and French operas, full-length pantomime ballets, and German plays and Singspiele. In their place came a theater troupe performing in German, whose activities were extended two years later by the formation of a Singspiel company (for whom Mozart produced Die Entführung aus dem Serail in 1782). In 1783, however, apparently admitting that his desire to achieve German theatrical dominance at the Burgtheater had not been shared by the public, Joseph reinstated an Italian company alongside the German one. Salieri, already court composer, became its music director and Da Ponte, newly settled in the city, its resident poet.

All this Mozart brought to his father's notice in a 1783 letter: "The Italian opera buffa has started again here and is very popular... Our poet now is a certain Abbate Da Ponte," who promises that, after supplying per obbligo a libretto for Salieri, "he will write a new libretto for me. But who knows whether he will be able to keep his word — or will want to? . . . If he is in league with Salieri, I shall never get anything out of him. But indeed I should dearly love to show what I can do in an Italian opera." Thinking out loud that meanwhile he would like to ask Varesco—librettist of Idomeneo, Mozart's 1781 opera seria for Munich—to provide him with "a new libretto for seven characters," he goes on to specify what kind of Italian opera he wants to write: "The essential thing is that on the whole the story should be really comic; and, if possible, (the librettist) ought to introduce two equally good female parts, one of these to be seria, the other mezzo carattere, but both parts equal in importance and excellence. The third female character may be entirely buffa, and so may all the male ones, if necessary." He knows exactly what he wants: in the same letter he earlier states that "I have looked through at least a hundred libretti and more, but I have hardly found a single one with which I am satisfied," and that "so many alterations would have to be made here and there, that even if a poet were to undertake to make them, it would be easier for him to write a completely new text—which indeed it is always best to do."

With the same prescience that characterized his work in Idomeneo, Mozart here lays down what was (with small variations) to be the ground plan for his three operas with Da Ponte. So it seems amazing that an interval of almost three years was to pass between the date of this letter—May 7, 1783—and that of the Figaro premiere. But first, there was the libretto problem: since nothing was forthcoming from Da Ponte, he tackled two others. The first, the same year, was L'Oca del Cairo (The Cairo Goose), a new libretto by Varesco; the second, Lo Sposo Deluso (The Deluded Bridegroom), on which he began work about two years later, had previously been set by Cimarosa. In both cases, after the completion of a few numbers, Mozart abandoned the librettos—not surprisingly, in view of their quality. After Da Ponte had agreed to Mozart's Beaumarchais project, the composer appears to have immediately given up Lo Sposo Deluso and taken up Figaro.

What this shows is that, as in the case of Idomeneo, not only the right librettist had to be found, but the right subject matter; and this was the second Beaumarchais Figaro play. Doubtless, one reason for its attractiveness to Mozart was that he could make his opera a direct sequel to Paisiello's operatic adaptation of Le Barbier de Séville—this, given its first performance in St. Petersburg in 1780, had been a huge hit in Vienna when given there in the summer of 1783. The characters were now favorites of the public, and so the new opera would afford Mozart—who liked Paisiello and admired his Barbiere—an opportunity of the kind he could never resist, to display the invincible superiority of his musical and theatrical gifts. (As Daniel Heartz has shown in "Constructing Le Nozze di Figaro [in Mozart's Operas; Berkeley, 1990], Paisiello's opera was much in his thoughts while he composed Figaro: similarities in motivic material and parallels in the dramatic situations that call the musically similar material into existence are too close to be coincidental.)

Then, the Beaumarchais Figaro plays both involve music. In its original form, Le Barbier de Séville had been intended as an opéra comique (the technical term for a musical drama in which speech and song are mingled), and Le Mariage de Figaro, filled as it is with musical numbers, approached the opéra comique genre more closely than any previous French play. Considerations of this kind would immediately have been appreciated by so naturally theater-minded an opera composer as Mozart. Of his response to the play's notorious political content we have no specific knowledge—unlike in the case of Idomeneo, letters charting the birth-process, and -pangs, of Figaro are frustratingly few. But it seems unlikely that Beaumarchais's social satire and criticism held any intrinsic attraction for him. He would have been aware that these must need to be toned down for Vienna—and anyway, he was never in this sense a rebel. It was surely for reasons deeper than notoriety or the solving of technical problems posed by adaptation (for Le Mariage de Figaro was by far the lengthiest French stage comedy of the 18th century) that he was drawn to the challenge of a Figaro opera.

Three themes running through the play made a specially strong deep impression on Mozart: of this the music supplies plentiful evidence. One is the plight of women per-

Opposite: San Francisco Opera's first Mozart opera was Le Nozze di Figaro in 1936. Ezio Pinza (top, shown with Charlotte Boerner's Susanna in the last act) portrayed the title role; Elisabeth Rethberg (center) was the Countess, captured in performance from the wings; (bottom) Gina Vanna was Cherubino. The cast also included Perry Askam (Count), Louis D'Angelo (Bartolo), Hans Clemens (Basilio), and Olga Callahan (Marcellina). Richard Lert was the conductor. Photos: Morton

Such uncomfortable outbursts Da Ponte may have excised (and in the opera Dr. Bartolo submits far more quiescently to marriage than his counterpart in the play). But what remains carries the underlying message clearly enough: the mighty comic engines of Le Nozze di Figaro are constantly fueled by stratagems—many of them devised, admittedly, by Figaro—for gaining women their freedom, however temporary, from the unjust or improper actions of men. In the long finale of Act II, widely held to be the greatest single example of ensemble writing in all opera, Mozart's powers of dramatization are at full stretch: his immeasurably brilliant exploration for dramatic purposes of sonata-form principles, command of in-depth psychological analysis through melody, and comprehension of the human voice in all manner of combination and contrast—of this last the finale's graded expansion from three participants through four to seven, spatially divided (two groups of three on either side of the Count), provides perhaps the matchless demonstration. Everything fuses to develop this theme of stratagem and strategy to the point of comic combustion.

Another theme is female alliance—often, not always, as a direct response to men's unjust or improper actions. In the opera, Figaro and the Count are never alone together: Da Ponte, removing entirely the Beaumarchais Act III, Scene 5, an intricate pas de deux for the play's two leading opponents, left their battles of wills and wits to be exemplified by confrontations during the ensemble scenes of Acts II and III. Indeed, until the fifth scene of the opera's fourth act, in which Figaro assembles a handful of men (Bartolo, Basilio, a few workmen) to witness Susanna's supposed forthcoming treachery, no scene displays any purely male grouping. Of women together, on the other hand, the treatment is wonderfully substantial and expressive. We see Susanna alone with Marcellina once, and—central to the opera's endlessly vital, full-hearted perception of women—Susanna alone with the Countess three times: first in Act II; then in Act III, while the latter dictates her canzonetta sull'aria, the letter by means of which the Count will be drawn to the assignation "under the pines" that the two have prepared for him; and finally in Act IV, just before their garden venture in exchanged costumes.

The simplest of musical devices—that of two voices echoing each other's melodic phrases—is employed to characterize two of these meetings, to a widely differing end. In the Act I duet for Susanna and Marcellina, "Via, resti servita," the notes sung are exactly the same much of the time, taken up each in turn with spitfire vivacity, but the words are different: Marcellina's every phrase of mock deference is trumped by Susanna's ripostes, and the result is a perfect comic essay-in-miniature on women at war in polite society. (This demonstration in purely vocal terms of apparently irreconcilable differences provides the backdrop, as Mozart the in-depth, long-range dramatic psychologist meant it to, for the sublimely concordant coda to the Act III Sextet, "Riconosci in questo amplesso," in which Susanna's voice with overflowing happiness rises atop, then sinks below Marcellina's to speak volumes about reconciliation achieved in the face of the Count and Don Curzio. From this moment Marcellina is one of Susanna's staunchest allies, as she shows in Act IV.) In the Act III Letter Scene, in contrast, echo-repetition is used to touch in the feelings of affectionate trust and, indeed, emotional equality that mistress and maidservant are capable of showing each other while developing their battle plan. The first time around the Countess states the melody and Susanna repeats it, the second Susanna states what has been dictated to her and the Countess varies her repetitions, then both vary and embellish, until at the close the two come together in a blissful chain of thirds and sixths.

The third theme of the play to which Mozart appears particularly responsive—it is this, I believe, perhaps more than any other aspect of the opera, that places it among the central, "necessary," eternally self-renewing works of western art—is the depiction of various types of love relationships within the context of normal life. Like few other operas—Wagner's Meistersinger von Nürnberg and Verdi's Falstaff come to mind—Le Nozze di Figaro draws its dramatic incident out of a created "real world," an environment peopled with recognizable, three-dimensional types of different stations in close proximity. On the Count's estate at Aguas Frescas, work gets done (in the new living quarters for Mr. and Mrs. Figaro-to-be; in the Countess's bedchamber; in the garden) and, in spite of passing intrigue, misunderstanding, and friction, people carry on co-existing. For all the gloriously farcical improbabilities that occur during this particular "mad day"—the hide-and-seek around the armchair, the missing seal on the letter, the disguising of Cherubino, the leap from the window, the "impresso geroglifico" on Figaro's right arm telling Marcellina he is her son—it is not the comedy alone that makes Le Nozze di Figaro a never-ending source of pleasure, emotional nourishment, and instruction on how to live with one's fellow human beings. Vertical family relationships are few—while Figaro's previously unknown parents make themselves known during the opera, the revelation is a comic plot-hinge rather than a component of any dramatization of child-parent relationships, and the Countess's illegitimate child, fruit of a brief sexual relationship with Cherubino and subject of L'Autre Tartuffe, ou La Mère Coupable of 1792, the third Beaumarchais Figaro play, has yet to be conceived. (In an English National Opera Figaro production of the late 1970s, the director, Jonathan Miller, felt a need to show her with two children during the orchestral

Le Nozze di Figaro

ACT I

Count Almaviva's valet, Figaro, and Countess Almaviva's personal maid, Susanna, are to be married and have been given the room connecting their employers' personal apartments. Susanna warns Figaro that this will assist the Count in his attempts to seduce her. Figaro determines to outwit Almaviva. The housekeeper of the villa, Marcellina, has lent Figaro money against a promise of marriage, and plots with her ex-employer, Doctor Bartolo, how to prevent Figaro's wedding, since the sum is unpaid; Bartolo will urge the Count to order a breach of promise action and have the wedding postponed. Cherubino, a well-born page living in the villa, has roused Almaviva's indignation by his amorous conquests, and will be dismissed unless Susanna intercedes with the Countess. Cherubino hides when Almaviva enters to court Susanna. The arrival of Don Basilio, priest and music teacher, causes Almaviva to hide as well, but he emerges when Basilio gossips about Cherubino's passion for the Countess. By accident the Count discovers Cherubino's hiding place and angrily orders the boy to accept a commission in the Almaviva Regiment, stationed far away.

ACT II

Susanna and Figaro conspire with the Countess to embarrass Almaviva by rigging a double rendezvous; this involves disguising Cherubino (still lurking on the grounds) as a girl. Susanna gives the boy a costume fitting in the Countess' bedroom. The Count arrives and Cherubino quickly has to be hidden. The worst is suspected, but the conspirators get the better of Almaviva, notwithstanding the gardener, Antonio, who insists that he has seen Cherubino. At the moment of reconciliation Marcellina bursts in with Bartolo and Basilio. They easily persuade the Count to try Figaro for breach of promise.

ACT III

Don Curzio, the judge, receives instructions from the Count on how to conduct the case. When he leaves, Susanna, encouraged by the Countess, finds a pretext to visit the Count and arrange the false rendezvous with him for that evening. But the Count overhears her telling Figaro that the case is as good as won. The litigants assemble; the Count supports Curzio in the judgment that Figaro must either repay Marcellina, or marry her. Figaro explains that he is a foundling of respectable birth. Marcellina discovers that she is his mother and Bartolo his father. They decide to celebrate a double wedding. The Countess and Susanna concoct a letter of assignation for the Count. Now the village girls, led by the gardener's daughter, Barbarina, bring flowers to the Countess. One of the girls is recognized to be Cherubino in skirts, but Barbarina persuades the Count to let her marry the boy. The act ends with the civil wedding during which Susanna delivers her note.

ACT IV

In the garden, where the rendezvous are to be faked, Figaro suspects his wife of cuckolding him. But Susanna and the Countess exchange clothes. Cherubino and Almaviva are both found embracing the Countess, thinking her to be Susanna. Figaro comes upon Susanna (disguised as the Countess) and tells her where the Count and Susanna are. He suddenly realizes who it is, but decides to keep silent to pay her back for her trick. He then pretends to make passionate love to the Countess until Susanna jealously reveals herself. They put on an act for the Count who arrives, seizes Figaro, and calls his servants. Everyone appears except the Countess, and they all take Susanna to be their mistress. She implores forgiveness but the Count is adamant until the real Countess appears and he realizes what has been happening. Grasping the truth at last, the Count begs his wife's forgiveness, and all ends happily.

Blanche Thebom at 50

first appearance with the San Francisco Opera Company. The grandly scaled dramatic effectiveness forecast in her Opera House recital of last season was amply fulfilled. She rejoices in a luscious, sultry contralto (sic) which is ideally suited to the character of Amneris. . . . Her singing was equally remarkable for its histrionic power, its respect for the best tradition of the vocal art, and its faithfulness to the composer's text. Furthermore, Miss Thebom's sarongs (sic), and the figure that goes under them, are something sensational."

Alexander Fried, who played musical Ebert at the Examiner in those days to Frankenstein's musical Siskel, seconded most of the emotions, both positive and negative:

"The news of the cast was the Amneris of Blanche Thebom, American mezzo-soprano. Miss Thebom is so young and good-looking—and she wore her scanty, tropical gowns so pleasantly—that she put the whole Aida story out of whack. Why would Radames object to marrying her—and a throne in the bargain?"

Unlike his journalistic competitor, Fried heard no traces of a contralto. He described "a big, full, dramatic voice that carries its impact way up to the soprano range." And he summed up Thebom's obvious theatrical impact this way: "She filled the role with such real and tigerish passion that she made it intensely interesting even in the penultimate Aida scene that so often gets dull."

Amneris remained Thebom's key assignment in San Francisco. She returned for revivals in 1949, 1952 and 1957, setting something of a gold standard in the role.

The celebrated mezzo-soprano, who can now celebrate the 50th anniversary of her memorable San Francisco Opera debut, received lots of notices in her long, diverse and remarkably productive career. The details changed, of course, as she made her illustrious way from Verdi to Wagner to Mozart to Bellini to Strauss (both Johann and Richard) to Stravinsky to Poulenc to Berg to Barber. But the essential tone remained the same.

Here was a thinking person's singer. Here was a rare artist blessed with a beautiful, wide-ranging, essentially lyrical voice, keen dramatic instincts that made their mark even in minimally-rehearsed repertory performances, a useful sense of glamour, good taste and physical attributes that blithely contradicted all those popular cartoon no-

By MARTIN BERNHEIMER

The headline over the review in the San Francisco Chronicle on September 27, 1947 wasn't very promising. "A poor Aida," it grumped, mincing no opinion. Alfred Frankenstein hadn't had a very good night at the opera. Nor, apparently, had Verdi.

The critic, ever-rueful, found the performance "the poorest of the opera season." He reported that it "had the look, sound and general spirit of something that had been run up in a hurry." The would-be romantic tenorissimo on duty, Kurt Baum, "ambled through the role of Radames with all the airs and graces of a genial bartender." Although Frankenstein mustered some praise for the literally stellar protagonist, Stella Roman, he said "her phrasing reminds one of nothing so much as one of those corridors full of distorting mirrors which they have in amusement parks, (but) in amusement parks they are supposed to be funny." Paul Breisch conducted, one was told, "without too much fire or punch." The costumes and ballet invoked images of "circus-like vulgarity."

Frankenstein did admire the Amonasro of the evening, Leonard Warren. But—and it was a crucial but—he found redeeming virtue in a 29-year old mezzo-soprano from Monessen, Pa., who was making her debut as Amneris, the wily and tempestuous daughter of the king of Egypt.

Also sprach Frankenstein:

"The evening was significant mainly for the fact that it marked Blanche Thebom's tions of prima (and seconda) donnas impersonating battleships.

Thebom wasn't exactly an unknown commodity when she first came to the San Francisco Opera. Having studied with a paragon predecessor, Edyth Walker, and, to a lesser degree, Margarete Matzenauer, she had made her debut with the Metropolitan in 1944 as Wagner's Fricka—three years before conquering San Francisco. By then, she had already accumulated valuable experience on recital stages and had appeared as soloist in orchestral concerts under such prestigious conductors as Eugene Ormandy and Dimitri Mitropoulos.

She was an archetypal American artist, Swedish parentage notwithstanding. War-time conditions precluded training and exposure in Europe. Like many a colleague in that era, she had made her Met debut without the advantage of previous stage experience. Under the circumstances, her San Francisco engagement represented a significant expansion of professional horizons.

Her relationship with the Company continued through 1963 when she sang a final performance of The Dialogues of the Carmelites during a Los Angeles tour, having participated in the U.S. premiere of Poulenc's masterpiece in San Francisco five seasons earlier. Her relationship with the city continues to this day. She lives and teaches here in what has turned out to be a remarkably unretiring retirement.

Thebom sang many of her most famous roles in the War Memorial Opera House. Her second assignment was Laura in La Gioconda, followed by her classic Brangäne in Tristan und Isolde—a specialty perpetuated on the possibly definitive recording with Kirsten Flagstad. The stern Walküre Fricka followed in 1949, counterbalanced by two voluptuously wily figures in French opera: Giulietta in Les Contes d'Hoffmann and, more important, Saint-Saëns's Dalila.

San Francisco also cast Thebom in a number of assignments that, in retrospect, might seem somewhat less characteristic. During her first season, she briefly tried on little Cherubino's trousers in Le Nozze di Figaro. In 1951 she undertook Marina in Musorgsky's Boris Godunov in Italian—in deference, no doubt, to the inveterate Italian tsar of Ezio Pinza. She also invaded territory dominated elsewhere by her putative rival, Risë Stevens, offering an impetuous Octavian in Der Rosenkavalier (a role Thebom sang nowhere else), Gluck's noble Orfeo and, yes, the ultimate sex-bomb über Alles, Carmen.

A mainstay at the mighty Met from 1944 to 1967, Thebom did not appear abroad a great deal—not, at any rate, by current standards. When she did travel, however, she made the trip eminently worthwhile. She brought her Dorabella to a Glyndebourne Così fan tutte back in 1950 (listen, if you can find the highlights recording, to the luscious blend of her voice with the exquisite Fiordiligi of Sena Jurinac). She sang Berlioz's Didon in the first complete Troyens at Covent Garden in 1957. She made the Russians sit up and take notice when she clicked Carmen's castanets at the isolated Bolshoi in deepest, darkest 1957.

In a sentimental salute to her forebears, she also made a vastly successful pilgrimage to Sweden, where she ventured a bonafide, full-scale soprano role for the first and last time: Elisabeth in Tannhäuser. "Remember," she now cautions, "the house in Stockholm seats only 1,800."

After her final engagements as a singer, she served as manager of the all-too-short-lived Atlanta Opera in 1968, then taught at universities in Arkansas and California (San Francisco State). Today, at an astonishingly vibrant and youthful 79, she remains actively involved in numerous educational projects. This summer, for instance, she led a three-week course for girls with operatic aspirations, aged 12 to 17; true to her own experience, she declares herself opposed to "middle-aged debutantes." She's also working on her memoirs, which could be provocative.

Clock, calendar and personal inclinations permitting, she still keeps in touch with the ever-changing world of opera, though she isn't inevitably ecstatic about what she encounters. "I go rather seldom," she admits, "mostly if the work is something I have not seen before, or if a particularly interesting artist is in the cast—someone like Thomas Hampson in Hamlet last year."

True to her reputation for unvarnished candor, she voices skepticism about current operatic habits and standards. "I take very little pleasure in what I see," she says sadly, "and a lot less in what I hear. So many of the young singers seem unable to make a properly founded, wonderfully focused sound."

She recalls her San Francisco career fondly. "I sang so many different roles," she says, "in so many styles. Versatility was the whole thing in my day. We were a company. There wasn't time to leave town between performances, and we appreciated ensemble values. It was a joy going from one thing to another that was totally different.

"I have great memories of that first season, 50 years ago. After Amneris came Laura in La Gioconda. I didn't exactly relish the assignment, but it is a lovely part—more of a soprano part, really. And it was the only role in which I got the tenor. Then there was my only Cherubino. It isn't a heavy-duty Mozart challenge like the others that came later, but it was great fun. And it was my first Mozart."

She chuckles when reminded that the San Francisco Chronicle originally labeled her a contralto. "I was a true mezzo," she insists. "I had great comfort in the entire range, but I think I had a mezzo-soprano personality. I always found the acting challenge as a mezzo more interesting. I suppose I could have done some of the soprano things—Isolde actually isn't that high. But, apart from that one careful fling with Tannhäuser in Stockholm, I never really strayed."

And what about Amneris's reported "sarong" on that fateful first night in 1947? What about the "scanty tropical gowns" replete with visions of Dorothy Lamour slinking with Bob and Bing down the road to ancient Egypt?

"Of course it wasn't a sarong," Thebom says, obviously amused at the thought. "We wore our own costumes in those days. Mine were open, with a bare midriff. They were quite spectacular."

Amneris did not flaunt Thebom's trademark long hair. But those flowing dark tresses were well displayed in other roles, and Milton Cross, the prim announcer on the Met broadcasts, often assured presumably curious listeners from coast to coast that no wigs were required when Thebom was on the stage. "My hair only comes down to my waist now," says the impeccably coiffed diva, "but during my career it was down to the floor."

Thebom is pleased to learn that she shares her anniversary year in San Francisco with Leontyne Price, who made her local debut exactly a decade later. [Miss Price will be the subject of a magazine tribute in a later issue. Ed.] When Price first appeared at the War Memorial Opera House, on September 20th, 1957, her assignment was Madame Lidoine in the U.S. premiere of The Dialogues of the Carmelites. Thebom portrayed Mother Marie. Five weeks later, in yet another Aida, Price served as a last-minute replacement for an indisposed Antonietta Stella, assuming the title role for the first time anywhere. Thebom, of course, was Amneris.

"I have very warm memories of Leontyne," Thebom says, "and of our work together. She was a wonderful colleague. We had a long, incredibly intense, personally involving period of rehearsals for Carmelites, and, to complicate matters, none of us happened to be Catholic. It was an enormous emotional puzzle. I think we helped each other. I found it a very rewarding experience. Under the circumstances, I was particularly glad we sang the opera in English."

Forty years ago, operatic casting was not exactly color blind. Marian Anderson had made her ridiculously belated debut at the Met only in 1955, razing racial barriers as the first African-American to take a major role in that monumental house. Significantly, perhaps, Thebom had to pause and reflect when asked if Price was the first black artist with whom she shared the stage. "Yes," she concludes. "I think she was."

San Francisco Opera Guild's Fol de Rol had many light-hearted moments through the years, one of the best being Blanche Thebom's appearance as Lady Godiva, wrapped in her own hair, and singing "I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Out of My Hair."

If Thebom harbors anything but good feelings about any of her operatic partners, she tends to keep those feelings to herself. "You know," she insists (perhaps too much?), "I liked all of them." She illustrates the point with a sports metaphor. "If you work up to being in league with the first run of horses, you respect your colleagues."

Still, not all colleagues are created equal. Thebom speaks with special awe, tempered by fondness, of Kirsten Flagstad, the Norwegian Isolde in excelsis who brought her to London for the epochal Tristan under Wilhelm Furtwängler. She speaks with passing bemusement of Elisabeth Schwarzkopf, who turned up unheralded at a recording session for Act Two to interpolate a couple of high Cs for Flagstad, then a bit challenged in the top register. She promises to tell more about that "surprising" experience in her autobiography.

One of her greatest successes at the Met involved a role she never sang in San Francisco: Dorabella in Così fan tutte, and much of that success rests with the ebb and flow of her voice with the lustrous soprano of Eleanor Steber (a Fiordiligi quite unlike Sena Jurinac, Thebom's previous, equally formidable stage sister).

"Eleanor and I had a special thing going," Thebom remembers. We had absolutely no problem coordinating our voices. When it came to duets, she said, 'I feel like I'm singing with your voice,' and I felt the same way."

Opera is an irrational art, as Chorley duly noted. As such, it thrives, on some levels at least, on gossip, oversize egos and rivalries, both real and imagined. In the 1950s, aficionados loved to dwell on the bond, or possible lack thereof, between the two leading American mezzo-sopranos—Thebom and Risë Stevens. Both were beautiful and glamorous. Both were excellent actresses. Both had carried on a flirtation with Hollywood (Thebom in The Great Caruso, Stevens in Going My Way and The Chocolate Soldier). Everyone assumed, or at least hoped, that the two loathed each other.

Thebom demurs. "We were extremely compatible. We had a good relationship."

Be that as it may, Stevens monopolized certain assignments in New York. "Yes," admits Thebom, "it is true that I never got two roles at the Met because of Risë: Orfeo and Octavian. But we shared a number of roles. She often would call me to ask if I happened to be available in case she wanted to cancel a Carmen. She didn't want to cancel if someone else would have taken over. She trusted me. That's the sort of rivals we were."

Undeniably sensuous and magnetic, Stevens may have posed a threat to Thebom in some areas. She hardly ever invaded Thebom's Wagner territory, however, and she avoided Verdi altogether. There was plenty of room in the profession for both of them.

As a teacher, Thebom still relies on the lessons she learned from Edyth Walker (1867-1950). The great American mezzo-soprano, London's first Elektra and a much-admired Kundry in Bayreuth, had herself studied with Aglaia Orgeni (1841-1926), a pupil of Pauline Viardot (1821-1910). "I'm pretty well grounded," Thebom says, "in the García method." Given her pedagogical lineage, that's something of an understatement.

She says her studies with Margarete Matzenauer (1881-1963), another fabled predecessor, proved somewhat less conclusive. "I went to her to coach Dalila. After all, she had sung the role opposite Caruso. Her advice wasn't all that probing. 'You sing this here,' she would say. 'Then you sit down.'"

Thebom laughs. She likes to look back in good humor, and can afford to. "I know it sounds awful," she says, "but I have no regrets."

When the time finally came for her to leave the stage, she apparently bade farewell senza rancore. The sentiment recalls Puccini's Mimi. "I promised myself I would leave before anyone wanted me to," she adds. The sentiment recalls Strauss' Marschallin. All the world's an opera. ♦ introduction to "Porgi amor," in order to "explain" the background to the distresses, dissatisfactions, and ennui currently experienced by the Almaviva couple.) Yet, the impression one gains during the opera is of several generations and types of family cohabiting in or else visiting a particular household, with different levels of conflict, truce, and concord stratified throughout, and with traditional practices and ceremonies honored at crucial places. Pregnant though it may be with plot-advancement points, and regularly punctuated by the Count's fretful mutterings, the culmination of the third act is the operatic medium's most complete and rounded dramatization of weddings as ordinary people often experience them in ordinary life: smiles, tears, moments of discomfort and dissatisfaction, and at some point everyone merrily dancing.

All this attests to the feeling of rightness, "felt life" (in the Henry James phrase), psychologically pithy character-observation that the opera exudes: informed by all the vivacity and ingenuity of the Beaumarchais play (if not its "political" energy), and with the immeasurable enrichment of Mozart's music. At its heart are the four types of love-involvement, with sexual attraction an inevitable and fascinatingly variable ingredient, which gives this "felt life" its peculiar combination of good humor, depth, and poignancy. At one extreme of age (and libido) there is Cherubino, just past puberty and ecstatically in love with love. Mozart's and Da Ponte's adherence to theatrical tradition in having the young aristocrat played en travesti—a boy (impersonated by a woman) who is then required to dress up as a girl—releases in the character a pansexual allure that permits adolescents of any and every sexual persuasion (and age) to identify with him: no knowledge of La Mère Coupable is necessary to reach the end of the opera suspecting that Cherubino and Barbarina will not long remain an "item." At the other extreme are Bartolo and Marcellina, every flicker extinguished of the "antico amor," the "ancient romance" that long ago brought Figaro into being—no singing together here! Having begun the opera both determined, for entirely opposite reasons, that Marcellina should win her case, and Figaro, they end it in a state of marital truce.

Between these come the servant and master-mistress couples: and it is here that Mozart's comprehension of the human voice in combination and contrast, of which I wrote earlier, is revealed in fullest subtlety and delicacy. Not just in their arias do the four make this manifest: it is on their method and manner of singing together—when this occurs and in what context—that

IN KIND GIFTS
Mr. Miran Kojian

Mozart focuses his exploration and development of these two relationships. As Heartz points out in the previously-mentioned Figaro essay, the nub of the opera's opening number is Susanna's teaching Figaro—who at the start is busily measuring out room-lengths—to sing her tune, which at measure 49 he begins to do. This forms the psychological background to their second number together, at the other end of the opera, in the Act IV finale. Here Figaro, having finally seen through Susanna-in-Countess-disguise, pretends to make advances to the finta Contessa, upsetting Susanna thoroughly; then in "Pace, pace mio dolce tesoro" he reassures her that all along he recognized "the voice I adore," and at measure 11 she takes up his tune while his lower-line harmonization provides the thirds and sixths that, along with the lovingly rocking 6/8 rhythm, make us confident that their partnership is an equal one, sturdy and of long-lasting substance.

In sharp contrast, the only episode showing the Count and Countess vocally alone together, "Esci omai, garzon malnato" in Act II, pictures them seriously in conflict, revealing through the soprano's and baritone's varieties and contrasts of vocalità some of the character traits—his easily-provoked rage, puffed-up sense of honor, and baseless mistrust of his wife; her innate dignity and grace even in extremis—that have set them apart. In the opera's emotional climax, just before its closing stretch, their voices appear to make peace with each other: the Count's simple four-measure plea, "Contessa, perdono," followed by the Countess's six-measure reply. Yet in this passage of sublime simplicity there is also a profound pathos, which emanates as much from the character differences that these ten measures so painfully underline as from their calming sentiments. The way her voice "tops" his, the way her phrases prove at once more supplely rounded and (by two measures) more expansive than his—these small details speak, again, volumes about the course their marriage is likely to take. The termination of the "folle giornata" is a many-voiced bustle of D-major merriment, which is heard and felt to be, in both key and rhythmic pattern, a blood relative of the D-major overture (the opera's end is its beginning?). But just beneath this exhilarating surface, some poignant facts of "real life"—one marriage will surely last, the other probably not—remain for our contemplation: not, perhaps, while the mood of closing elation is still strong, but once it has begun to die down. ♦

A native of Norway, SOLVEIG KRINGELBORN studied at the Norwegian State Academy of Music and the Royal Academy of Opera in Stockholm. She made her operatic debut at the Royal Swedish Opera as Papagena (Die Zauberflöte) in 1987 and, by 1990, had received the Norwegian Critics' Award for her portrayal of Mimi in La Bohème. The soprano is now one of the leading Scandinavian singers with a specialty for Norwegian song and also possesses a wide operatic repertoire. Miss Kringleborn has sung at the Bolshoi Theatre in Moscow; the Vienna State Opera; Ravinia Festival (Marzelline in Fidelio); the Monnaie in Brussels (Fiordiligi in Così fan tutte); the Bastille in Paris (Antonia in Les Contes d'Hoffmann and her first Tatyana in Eugene Onegin); Los Angeles Music Center Opera (the Countess in Le Nozze di Figaro); Geneva Opera (Ilia in Idomeneo) and the Rome Opera (Fiordiligi). She made her debut at the 1993 Salzburg Festival as Fiordiligi, returning for the Countess in Le Nozze di Figaro in 1995 and 1996. She recently made her Glyndebourne Festival debut as Fiordiligi and sang her first Donna Elvira in Don Giovanni at Covent Garden. Since her critically acclaimed 1991 debut at the BBC Proms in the world premiere of Lutoslawski's Chantefleurs et Chantefables (dedicated to the artist), Miss Kringleborn has appeared in concert singing the Brahms Requiem in Lisbon, Strauss's Four Last Songs with the BBC Scottish Symphony, Mahler's Second Symphony with the Berlin Philharmonic under Claudio Abbado, and Berg's Seven Early Songs in San Francisco under Herbert Blomstedt. Among her recordings are Grieg's Haugtussa and Olav Trygvason, Sibelius's Luonnotar, Grieg songs with Rozhdestvensky, songs by Lutoslawski, and Black Roses, a solo recital with Malcolm Martineau. Forthcoming is Beethoven's Ninth Symphony led by Giuseppe Sinopoli. Future operatic engagements include Tatyana at Barcelona's Liceu, Marie in The Bartered Bride at the Glyndebourne Festival, as well as her first Elsa in Lohengrin and her first Marschallin in Der Rosenkavalier at the Norwegian State Opera.

SYLVIA McNAIR enjoys a career which encompasses acclaimed worldwide performances in concert, recital, opera and on her many recordings. Last season the soprano returned to the Metropolitan Opera as Tytania in A Midsummer Night's Dream (the role of her 1992 San Francisco Opera debut) and performed with the New York Philharmonic. She also appeared in concert with the Orchestra of St. Luke's; with Wolfgang Sawallisch and the Philadelphia Orchestra; the Boston Symphony and Seiji Ozawa in Boston and at the Kennedy Center; and with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in a series of Mahler concerts led by Bernard Haitink. Abroad last season, Miss McNair toured Japan with the Berlin Philharmonic and participated in the Salzburg Easter Festival with Claudio Abbado. Highlights of recent seasons also include a 1996 Grammy Award for The Echoing Air: The Music of Henry Purcell; engagements with the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra and the Orchestra of St. Luke's; the Mozart Requiem in Salzburg, as well as a New Year's Eve gala (televised live in Europe) with the Berlin Philharmonic led by Abbado. She also sang in recital in Cologne, Frankfurt, Amsterdam, Munich and London and sang the role of Rosina in Corigliano's The Ghosts of Versailles at the Lyric Opera of Chicago. Among Miss McNair's engagements during the 1997-98 season are Pamina in Die Zauberflöte at the Salzburg Festival, in addition to concerts with the Los Angeles Philharmonic (Britten's Les Illuminations, Debussy's Le Martyre de Saint Sébastien), the New York Philharmonic (Bach's St. Matthew Passion), and the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra (arias by Handel and Mozart). Recent recordings include Poppea in L'Incoronazione di Poppea led by John Eliot Gardiner, Susanna in Le Nozze di Figaro with Claudio Abbado, and Corinna in Il Viaggio a Reims also conducted by Abbado. The native of Ohio with a master of music degree from Indiana University was the first recipient (1990) of the prestigious Marian Anderson Award.

An internationally acclaimed soprano and interpreter of Mozart, GRAZIELLA SCIUTTI began her career when she sang Bach's St. Matthew Passion in Rome under the baton of Herbert von Karajan and made her operatic debut in 1951 at the Aix-en-Provence Festival, where she appeared in Menotti's The Telephone and Cimarosa's Il Matrimonio Segreto. Her first British appearance was as Rosina in The Barber of Seville at Glyndebourne, and during the 1954-55 season she joined the ensemble of Milan's La Scala, where she returned repeatedly for performances under Karajan. Miss Sciutti was the leading soprano of La Piccola Scala from its inception in 1955, and for eight years brought international renown to that company in Milan and on its tours to Edinburgh, Vienna, Brussels and other music centers. The following year marked her U.S. debut at San Francisco Opera with one of her most famous portrayals, Susanna in Le Nozze di Figaro, as well as Oscar in Un Ballo in Maschera. Having scaled the heights of the operatic world, the beloved artist was invited to join John Copley in staging L'Elisir d'Amore at Covent Garden, and soon after was asked to direct and sing in La Voix Humaine at Glyndebourne in 1977. That production prompted Lotfi Mansouri to engage her as director of Canadian Opera's Le Nozze di Figaro in 1978 and L'Elisir in 1979. She has since staged productions at San Francisco Opera (L'Elisir, 1984) and the S.F. Perfectionists prevail.

Buying or selling a property is like staging a major event. It's all in the details. That's the beauty of working with McGuire's new Registry Service. It allows us to stay on top of the fine points like no one else.

When you call our Registry Service, you'll get your first taste of our painstaking approach. A McGuire manager and one of our top agents will go to work for you. Putting a wealth of experience at your service. The kind of strategic thinking that will get your offer accepted or your property sold. And even the simple reassurance of someone calling up to see how it's going.

McGuire's Registry Service makes perfect sense. No one else offers it. No one else can.

"Do You Mean That San Francisco Opera Will Send Us Four Checks Every Year?"

Absolutely! When you make a life income gift to San Francisco Opera, you and/or someone you love will receive quarterly income payments for life. And, if you give low-yielding securities, the income you receive may very well be greater than the income you were previously earning.

In addition, your life income gift gives you the benefit of an immediate income tax deduction and the elimination of any capital gains tax. Above all, you have the satisfaction of knowing that your gift will help to ensure the future of the Opera for many years to come.

If you would like to learn more about gifts which pay you an income, please contact:
