A MESSAGE FROM THE GENERAL DIRECTOR

SOHEL

I am delighted to welcome you to San Francisco Opera's 2000/2001 Season, which runs from September 8, 2000 to July 1, 2001 in the War Memorial Opera House. We've planned a stunning array of masterworks ranging from baroque classics to contemporary works, including a world premiere of a new American opera, three Company premieres and the return of several beloved gems.

The Company's commitment to fostering the growth of the operatic repertoire continues with the world premiere of Dead Man Walking – a San Francisco commission from Chase Composer-in-Residence Jake Heggie, with renowned playwright Terrence McNally. First an award-winning book by Sister Helen Prejean then an Academy Award-winning motion picture, this eagerly anticipated production brings together an incomparable creative team and an impressive cast.

Next year also marks the centenary of the passing of one of the greatest of all musical geniuses – Giuseppe Verdi. To commemorate his life and work, San Francisco Opera will offer a sampling of his finest masterpieces with a new production of Luisa Miller, as well as exciting stagings of La Traviata, Aida and Simon Boccanegra. Our 78th Season is also highlighted by the Company premieres of Rimsky-Korsakov's The Tsar's Bride, Moore's poignant tale from the Old West, The Ballad of Baby Doe, which is presented in an all new production, and Handel's Semele, as well as revivals of our celebrated productions of Strauss's Der Rosenkavalier, Mozart's Die Zauberflöte and Donizetti's L'Elisir d'Amore.

A host of international conductors, including our own Music Director Donald Runnicles, will lead an illustrious roster of artists, who are joined by eminent directors and designers to create this yearlong celebration of opera. Enjoy!

Lotfi Mansouri
General Director

A MESSAGE FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD AND FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE SAN FRANCISCO OPERA ASSOCIATION

McCARTHY

On behalf of San Francisco Opera Association, we heartily congratulate Lotfi Mansouri in his final year as General Director. Our 2000/2001 Season marks 12 years under his inspired leadership, and it is because of his vision that we are celebrating yet another milestone with the world premiere of Dead Man Walking. This commission would not have been possible without the extraordinary and deeply appreciated leadership of Mrs. Paul L. Wattis, as well as funding for the Composer-in-Residence and additional production support provided by The Chase Global Private Bank, The Carlyle Fund, Susan and Dennis Carlyle, co-founders, The Howard Gilman Foundation and the National Endowment for the Arts.

Throughout Lotfi's tenure, it has been his mission to ensure that the vital art of opera is accessible to everyone in our community. Nowhere is this more evident than in his efforts to develop future audiences with massive outreach and to present productions of innovative works. We achieve this through significant support from our year-round sponsors: Grants for the Arts/San Francisco Hotel Tax Fund, the California Arts Council and the National Endowment for the Arts as well as our season sponsors: Bank of America, American Airlines and Kawai Pianos, provided by San Francisco Pianoworks, Inc.

Additionally, we wish to thank this year's production sponsors The Edgar Foster Daniels Foundation (Luisa Miller), Fred and Peggy Furth (The Tsar's Bride), Jane Bernstein and Bob Ellis (The Ballad of Baby Doe), Koret Foundation (for educational activities related to L'Elisir d'Amore) and The Bernard Osher Endowment Fund (Semele and Der Rosenkavalier).

Our thanks also go to San Francisco Opera Guild for partnering with the Opera Center each year to bring opera into 160 schools in Northern California, reaching approximately 30,000 students, and to BRAVO! Club for continuing to cultivate future opera audiences. Indeed, our 78th Season is an exciting time in the Company's history and it is our sincere pleasure to welcome you to San Francisco Opera.

DONIZETTI — TRIUMPH AND TRAGEDY

BY JOHN ARDOIN

Rossini was only five years older than Donizetti, but he had become a renowned figure throughout Europe by the time he was twenty-one. It took thirty operas and a decade longer for Donizetti to command a similar position in the theatrical life of his day. His fame peaked in 1835 with the writing of what would prove to be his most acclaimed opera, Lucia di Lammermoor. And with the death of Bellini the year before and with Rossini's abandoning of the operatic stage, Donizetti at last gained the preeminent place in the world of nineteenth-century Italian opera. But he would be king of the mountain for a comparatively short time. On the horizon were a series of personal disasters, as well as the presence of the young Verdi, whose rise in the operatic world of the time would be meteoric.

Donizetti had long been stalked by tragedy. His two children died young, and two years after the premiere of Lucia di Lammermoor his wife succumbed to cholera. Then, following a triumphant visit to Vienna in 1842, his own health began to give way, the result of advanced syphilis. In January of 1846, he had to be committed to an asylum near Paris and was kept secluded there for eighteen months. When he was finally released, he set out for his native city of Bergamo in northern Italy, but was stricken with paralysis en route. He lived only a few months after reaching Bergamo and died there, burned out and hallucinating. His life ended on the edge of madness at the age of fifty-one.

An unenviable life, certainly, but one whose pain and struggle yielded at least a half-dozen works that through the years have steadfastly held the stage and that still move and delight us today. As much as we admire the dark scores such as Lucia di Lammermoor, Anna Bolena and Maria Stuarda, it may be that Donizetti's greatest achievements were in the realm of comedy, a field in which he is challenged only by Rossini. But for all the wonders of Rossini's Barber, L'italiana and Cenerentola, there are many of us who are more than willing to give Donizetti the comedic place of honor because of the delicious nuances of a score such as L'Elisir d'Amore or his other light-hearted masterpiece Don Pasquale.

San Francisco Opera's first Elisir d'Amore took place in 1929. Nina Morgana was Adina; Tito Schipa, Nemorino; Millo Picco, Belcore; and Pompilio Malatesta, Dr. Dulcamara. No photos survived from that staging, but a few anonymous backstage shots did from our next Elisir presentation, which occurred in 1948. (Above) Bidi Sayão as Adina and Salvatore Bacaloni as Dr. Dulcamara follow a supernumerary on their way to the stage for the little Elisir play. (Facing page, bottom) Tito Gobbi, who made his U.S. debut here earlier that season in the title role of Il Barbiere di Siviglia, was the evening's Belcore, seen here awaiting the beginning of the act. (Facing page, top) Ferruccio Tagliavini, meanwhile, the evening's Nemorino, was in his dressing room, eating apples and getting ready for his entrance.

L'Elisir d'Amore, in particular, is not only an elixir of extraordinary musical potency, but it has sparkle, spontaneity and less of a sense of formula and fewer stock answers to persistent dramatic questions of its times. While it is undeniably a tasty operatic dish, it was one that had been quickly put together; one that was to be served and eaten while piping hot. Still, it is no less delicious for having been turned out with rapidity. After all, Donizetti was an old hand at fast food. There was more than just a little of McDonzetti about him.

And it was precisely his ability to whip up a dish quickly that had brought Elisir into being. When another composer had defaulted on his commission for the Teatro della Canobbiana, its impresario (undisturbed by the failure of Donizetti's most recent opera — Ugo, Conte di Parigi — at Milan's principal theater, La Scala) asked the composer for a new comedy. Donizetti was all too happy to accept the Canobbiana commission. He was also indignant when the impresario suggested he simply redo one of his old scores.

"Who is trying to make fun of me?" Donizetti replied. "I'm not accustomed to patching up my own works, nor anybody else's, either. You'll soon see that I am quite energetic enough to make you a brand-new opera in fourteen days. I give you my word." His first step was to enlist the help of Felice Romani as his librettist for Elisir. Donizetti informed the poet: "I am obliged to set a poem to music in fourteen days. I give you one week to prepare it for me. We'll see which of us has the more guts."

Such haste was not unusual in the early nineteenth century. The operatic world into which Donizetti was born was a far cry from what we know today. The demand back then was for new works, and filling this need involved hundreds of composers whose names are now found only in music encyclopedias, men such as Simone Mayr, Niccolò Zingarelli, Michele Carafa, Stefano Pavesi, Saverio Mercadante and Giovanni Pacini.

They were able craftsmen at the mercy of the impresarios who controlled Italy's opera houses, for it was the impresarios who chose new librettos, selected composers to set them and hired companies of singers for composers to write for. Bellini was among the first to rebel against being treated like a work horse. He saw himself more in the mode of a sensitive romantic hero, a stance that would be honed to perfection by Franz Liszt.

In contrast to Rossini and Donizetti, who accepted their status with only minor protests, Bellini thought of each of his operas as a special and unique creation, and, unlike Rossini, he did not recycle good music from a failed opera into his new opus. Donizetti, however, being a less glamorous and fashionable figure, and always in need of money, did little to fight the system. He was largely content to produce operas that were as much creatures of habit and formulae as was the old brand of opera seria practiced by Handel.

Nevertheless, the miracle of Donizetti is that he still managed to change the complexion of Italian opera by redirecting and loosening up its traditional forms and by bringing to opera greater dramatic veracity. He was influenced in this to a large degree by Mayr, his teacher, particularly in his "sentimental solemnity of melody and the fact that care taken to make orchestration an instrument of drama might be amply repaid" (Herbert Weinstock, a major Donizetti biographer). And from Rossini, Donizetti learned several important trade secrets: how to use crescendi to heighten the drama and to create comedy. He also borrowed elements of Rossini's unparalleled gift for writing patter songs — bravura arias built around an enormous mouthful of words.

In short, he became not only adept but facile in turning out operas to measure, and the short time he had to produce Elisir did not bother Donizetti nearly as much as the singers he had been assigned. He described them to his librettist like this: "We have a German prima donna, a tenor who stammers, a buffo with a voice of a goat and a French basso who isn't worth much. Dear Romani, courage and go ahead." Ironically, the Frenchman (a baritone, not a bass as Donizetti described him), Henri-Bernard Dabadie, had performed a year earlier in an opera by Daniel François-Esprit Auber entitled Le Philtre to a text by Eugène Scribe.

It was this very libretto that Romani would "borrow" to fashion his text for Elisir. Romani knew a good thing when he read it. Evidently Le Philtre had become a smash hit in the Paris of 1831 and received almost 250 performances during the next thirty years. Strangely enough, when Elisir reached the Paris Théâtre des Italiens in 1839, Auber's Le Philtre continued to play at the Opéra. No one in the capital, it seems, felt obliged to choose between the two. The same audiences flocked to both. In fact, someone suggested to Auber that the two operas be given as a double bill. "That's an idea,"

Auber responded, "though I think it might suit Donizetti better than me."

Romani kept Auber's plot line intact: a village boy is duped by a quack into buying a love potion that is supposed to make him irresistible to the most beautiful girl in town — but he renamed the characters. Térézine became Adina; Guillaume, Nemorino; Le docteur Fontanarose, Dr. Dulcamara; and Joli-Coeur and Jeannette became their exact Italian equivalents — Belcore and Giannetta. The amazing thing is that not only did Romani and Donizetti meet their deadline, but in the process, they presented the operatic world with one of its supreme delights.

Some idea of how Elisir came into being has been left us by a young friend of the composer's, Emilia Branca, who was later to marry Romani. She has recounted that during the period of composing Elisir, Donizetti arrived at her family's home one evening, very late for dinner. "Forgive me, forgive me, all my dear friends," he said breathlessly on entering. "I was on my way here half an hour ago, but when I passed Romani's house, I stopped in to see if he could give me something [words to be set]."

"In fact, my good friend handed me an entire duet. While I was reading the verses — beautiful, as only he could write them — I felt so inspired that, without realizing it I began to read them [as if] already set to music...I wanted to jot down the sketch at once...Tonight before I go to bed, I'll orchestrate it, tomorrow I'll give it to the copyist who will copy out the parts and give them to the singers."

These indeed beautiful verses were for the "Chiedi all'aura lusinghiera," the first-act duet for Adina and Nemorino. After dinner, Donizetti sang excerpts from his opera-in-progress for his friends. "Without possessing a beautiful voice," Emilia writes, "Donizetti sang very pleasantly: buffo parts in a comic and exhilarating fashion, especially little songs and Neapolitan ariette, folk songs and some composed by himself...as he accompanied himself brilliantly at the piano."

Despite Donizetti's admiration for Romani, their collaboration was not always an easy, smooth one. Almost ten years older than Donizetti, Romani had an explosive disposition and did not take suggestions from composers gracefully. For example, when Donizetti asked for an aria for Nemorino in the second act of Elisir, Romani bristled. "What's the point of that rustic bumpkin coming in and whining pathetically, when everything must be festive and gay?" The composer's persistence won out, and thank heavens it did. What would Elisir, or, for that matter, Italian opera be without "Una furtiva lagrima?"

Incidentally, I have always had a soft spot for Nemorino and never believed that he was merely the village idiot. Indeed, Donizetti's music seems to tell us the opposite. Like Nemorino, it is sweet, guileless and, in the case of "Una furtiva lagrima," infinitely touching. Nemorino is simply an uncomplicated, naive lad who is hopelessly in love. I am much less in sympathy with the spoiled, petulant Adina.

She is the worldly one, isolated by her money, beauty and ego. It is only when other girls in the town become interested in Nemorino that she realizes his true, loving character for the first time.

We in the audience have known from the first appearance of the strutting, arrogant Sgt. Belcore who the real person of quality is. It is precisely this knowledge, our empathy with Nemorino (not to mention the magic of Donizetti's music), that holds us rapt throughout a performance of Elisir. We spend the evening waiting for the same light to dawn on Adina.

The Canobbiana's new season opened on April 23, 1832, with an opera by Luigi Ricci — L'Orfanella di Ginevra — and Donizetti attended the first night to take a closer measure of the singers who would also be taking part in Elisir's premiere. He somewhat revamped his initial feelings about his cast-to-be, and the next day wrote to his father, "Last night was the opening, and the tenor is fair, the prima donna has a beautiful voice but only she knows what she is saying. The buffo is a dog...Next week, I begin rehearsals, although I haven't finished; little is lacking, however. Romani was obliged to finish in a hurry and is now revising certain details of the staging."

L'Elisir d'Amore was first heard on May 12, 1832. Evidently, despite Donizetti's misgivings about his cast, it seems to have acquitted itself well. The German who created Adina was Clara Sabina Heinefetter, one of six sisters, singers all; the tenor was Giambattista Genaro; Dabadie, who had earlier created the title role of Rossini's Guillaume Tell, was Belcore; and the "dog" buffo was Giuseppe Frezzolini, whose daughter was to become an acclaimed singer and later create Verdi's Giovanna d'Arco.

A leading Milanese newspaper was full of praise for the singers and the new opera: "Arias, duets, trios, ensemble pieces...Everything is beautiful, very beautiful, and was well applauded. To say which number is better than another is not an easy task...The composer was applauded for every number, and when the curtain fell at the end of the acts, he was acclaimed more and more often on the stage with the singers, collecting his honorable and merited reward..."

Perhaps a more accurate description of those first performances comes from Berlioz, who happened to be in Milan at the time and writes in his "Memoires" that "Out of a sense of duty I made myself go to hear the latest opera. Donizetti's L'Elisir d'Amore was being given at the Canobbiana. I found the theater full of people talking in normal voices, with their backs to the stage. The singers, undeterred, gesticulated and yelled their lungs out in the strictest spirit of rivalry.

"At least I presumed they did, from their wide-open mouths; but the noise of the audience was such that no sound penetrated except the bass drum. People were gambling, eating supper in their boxes, etcetera, etcetera. Consequently, perceiving it was useless to expect to hear anything of the score, which was then new to me, I left. It appears that Italians do sometimes listen. I have been assured by several people that it is so. The fact remains that music to the Milanese, as to the Neapolitans, the Romans, the Florentines and the Genoese, means arias, duets, trios, well sung; anything beyond that provokes only aversion or indifference."

At the time of these first performances, a contemporary of Donizetti's described the composer as "handsome...tall, slender, his broad forehead crowned with black curls, his features regular. He was graceful rather than elegant; his aspect was good-natured, a frank and open manner...which was very likable. He was simpatico beyond words, and the fair sex was devoted to him."

He was able to return this devotion when the score was being readied for publication by the house of Ricordi. Asked to whom he wished to dedicate the opera, Donizetti's answer was "To the Fair Sex of Milan." Who knows better how to distill this elixir? □

CONCOCTIONS, POTIONS, POISONS...

BY CHRISTOPHER HUNT

Michael Tippett once remarked, though he was not the first, that there is only one plot to comic opera: the obstacles to an eventually happy marriage. There are, however, numerous targets for operatic satire, which is not at all the same thing as comedy. Satire loses its bite with time. The few satirical operas that have kept the stage have done so not because of their satire. Offenbach's innumerable and wonderful little topical operettas, adored by his Parisian audiences in the 1870s, were forgotten once their social and political targets had fallen from power. But some forgotten comic masterpieces also owed much of their original success to topical satire that we no longer appreciate. Who recalls that the billeting-scene in Rossini's Barber of Seville, where Count Almaviva plays a drunken soldier billeted on the unfortunate Dr. Bartolo, was a triumph in the Rome of 1816 where it had its premiere, because in the north of Italy at that time the occupying Austrian army was enforcing its unwelcome presence on its citizens by just such procedures. The scene is still funny thanks to Rossini's comic genius, but its satire has no teeth. So it is also with Donizetti's Elisir d'Amore: its delicious musical wit works but we rarely think of the tyrannically present forces its satirical barb hit for Donizetti's contemporaries.

Bertolt Brecht once said of the great political tyrants that "they should by all means be held up before the public, and preferably to ridicule." He was certainly thinking of individual humans, but he knew his remark applies equally well to more generalized but no less tyrannical traits of life: love, health, cupidity, indeed any of the seven deadly — and a number of other — sins. It was Brecht of course who revived one of the most successful of all operatic satires — Gay and Pepusch's Beggar's Opera of 1728 — by updating its generalized satire on human foibles some 200 years later in The Threepenny Opera. Gay and Pepusch had set out to ridicule early eighteenth-century London's vogue for Italian opera seria, then led by Handel and Bononcini. That had lost all meaning by the twentieth century. But Brecht saw that the strength of John Gay's book came just as much from its ridiculous portrayal of more general human weakness — desire, sin, the flouting of law and morality by the rich, the clever and the unscrupulous. They were not well enough presented to work without Brecht's re-writing. But we don't need to update Donizetti's Elisir, which had its premiere in Milan in 1832, just over a century after Gay's and Pepusch's satire. Elisir's portrayal of the gullibility of love is so affectionate and charming, and so fundamentally timeless, that it retains its splendid comic force to our day. But it was not that alone which made for its original triumph. Donizetti's strongest satirical target in Elisir was not the absurdity of humans in love. It was something much more immediate, and serious: the traveling quack-doctor, and in a more general sense the whole state of human health and medicine.

Modern medical science is so skilled and so widely available that outside the Third World we have largely lost sight of how the precariousness of life preyed on people before our own time. It takes a new and formidable scare, like the arrival of AIDS, to restore to everyday existence what was its most tyrannical element until this century: the fear of ill-health. There was no effective anesthetic until long after Donizetti's time; a routine medical procedure like appendectomy was still a risky rarity in the 1930s; before the general availability of antibiotics in the 1950s, casual infections that we now barely notice still carried the risk of death. In Europe or America, dominating consciousness for many people as the risk of AIDS has for two decades dominated the lives of too many throughout the world, the greatest and perhaps commonest fear was of venereal disease, especially syphilis.

There was no cure for syphilis until our own time. But there were endless remedies available. Most of them were useless, some were dangerous, a few were fatal. The most frequent recipe for any venereal disease — and many lesser infections — involved the taking of mercury, or quicksilver, which the body cannot excrete and which can be fatal in accumulated doses. It was dispensed in infinitely varied mixtures, by registered apothecaries, and by itinerant quacks like Dr. Dulcamara. So were a thousand varied placebos with neither mercury nor any other powerful ingredient. Nemorino's bashful approach to the Great Quack, begging for a potion to make him irresistible to the village beauty, will have had a tart edge for those who had themselves slyly begged such a potion to help them with the consequence of their love-making to town and village beauties.

The Quacksalver, to give him his full title, distributed salves or potions to his clients. His was the only “scientific” solution for ill-health, psychological no less than physical. The alternatives were time, luck, or magic, the last dispensed perhaps by some old village woman, still likely to be called a witch in Donizetti’s era. The quack (whose unabbreviated description is so nearly a homophone for the quicksilver he so often incorporated in his stronger potions, though there seems to be no etymological link) was himself rarely free from the use of magical traditions. At the least, like all good doctors, he needed a keen understanding of human susceptibility. It was his most effective tool in “curing” his patients.

All of these aspects are in Donizetti’s opera. Medicine and quackery were not his only concern but they are the foreground, or focus, for the eternal comedy of human relationships, individual and societal, that make Elisir d’Amore still enchant us. It is perhaps the right word, for enchantment was mainly what potions were (are still?) about, in and out of opera. There are a good many of them in operatic history, few of them as benign as Nemorino’s wine. Their high-point as an operatic ingredient is also the operatic repertory’s strongest period, roughly from Donizetti to Puccini. Clearly they often replace the deus ex machina of baroque theater: where for Monteverdi or Handel a god might appear to deflect the course of human lives, for the less religious post-Enlightenment a different kind of supernatural agency was perhaps easier to accept, as if somehow its magic was more believable.

The two most familiar examples of the working of some sort of magic potion in opera come one from the comic zone, the other from the tragic: in the standard repertory Wagner’s Tristan und Isolde is certainly the supreme instance in serious opera. Elisir is the other. It is no accident of course that Wagner took his plot from one of the oldest and most powerful of legends, the story of Tristram and Iseult who fall irrevocably for each other after mistakenly taking a love potion. Nor is it really a surprise to find Adina in the opening scene of Elisir reading “la storia di Tristano” to the group of villagers around her, still less that they sing in chorus:

Elisir di sì perfetta,
di sì rara qualità
ne sapessi la ricetta,
conoscessi chi ti fa!
(Such a perfect elixir/
of such rare quality/
you needn’t know the recipe/
just as long as it works!)

Paolo Montarsolo, our Dr. Dulcamara in 1975, prepares to tell of the benefits of his “elixir” to the assembled villagers.

How right they are, as the succeeding two hours will wittily prove.

In keeping with a more cynical age: when the Swiss composer Frank Martin came to re-tell the Tristan story, in Le vin herbé, he had the spell of true love lose its power after three years. Donizetti in his way was hardly less of a cynic: Nemorino is indeed transformed but not by the force of magic. The deceitful effects of wine — to which chance (in the form of his inheritance) adds a powerful and satirical fillip — do the trick just as well, and we know the results will not last. In a rare 20th century parallel Eric Crozier had certainly not forgotten Nemorino’s experience when he re-cast the village hero of a Maupassant short story in the libretto of Albert Herring for Benjamin Britten. Albert’s adventure with spiked lemonade has different consequences but good alcohol is no less a potion of transformation for him than it is for Nemorino.

Alcohol is hardly rare in opera, as in life, on and off the stage, but it is more usually the excuse for a drinking song than it is intrinsic to the opera’s plot. It is rarely a means of advancing it. The wine toasted in the “libiamo” in La Traviata, the “herrlich, göttlich” wine tasted by Papageno in The Magic Flute, the “champagne” in Don Giovanni (which the text does not refer to as such), Falstaff’s sack or sherry, are among the better examples, integral to their operas’ plots. But they are hardly to be called potions despite being greeted as if they were. Even when actually described as a potion, operatic alcohol can be hopelessly ineffective, like the green and red chartreuse whose praises are sung with such delight in Chabrier’s L’Etoile. Somewhat more rarefied in the (presumably) alcoholic stakes but not praised at all is the nectar with which the gods in Orpheus in the Underworld are so satiated that they would do anything to get out of heaven altogether.

If these regularly inebriating indulgences cannot quite qualify as potions, a few yet-simpler drinks acquire almost potion-status even when their content is most ordinary: Arabella’s symbolic glass of plain water brings Richard Strauss to a positive orgy of sweetness, quite magical for his admirers; more genuinely magical water is found in Die Frau ohne Schatten but at least it is “the water of life” and is the elixir that will cure childlessness. And there is the sacred spring from which Gerald and Lakmé drink before Gerald leaves and before Lakmé eats the poisonous datura leaf in Delibes’s opera. Slightly stronger stuff is to be found in regular coffee, the source of all the trouble in Bach’s eponymous cantata, the nearest the Leipzig cantor came to writing an opera; and there is hot chocolate in Pergolesi’s Serva padrona, and in Mozart’s Così fan tutte, though in that case only the servant Despina seems to find it at all magical. (Mozart’s opera does however contain another famous satire on current medical practices, with Despina’s ludicrous use of a magnet to cure the effects of the “poison” taken by the two “Albanians.” As a child Mozart had himself played at the villa of the celebrated Dr. Mesmer in Vienna whose electro-magnetism was for a short while a near-hysterical medical fashion over much of Europe.)

None of these, however, is a “real” potion. In Tristan the potion is real enough but it is taken in the belief that it is something else; in Elisir the “stupendo elisir che desta amore” is fake, though it is taken in the belief that it is real. Real and fake are of the essence in operatic pottery, which is appropriate enough since the very notion of potions is bound up with magic and the supernatural. Whether an unbrewed herb qualifies as a potion is (I hope) merely academic: the effect is certainly magically potional in Britten's Shakespearean opera A Midsummer Night's Dream. Its capricious qualities (and unintended consequences) are of course the fulcrum of the opera's, and the play's, action. First used by Oberon to drop in his consort Tytania's eyes, the dangerous effect of the "little western flower, before milk-white, now purple with loves wound" is to make the recipient love whatever living thing is seen next. Oberon naturally requires his minion Puck to make sure that his queen will only "wake when some vile thing is near."

But potions are not always magical. Some are very unmagical indeed like that which puts Juliet to sleep which makes her appear dead in Gounod's Roméo et Juliette, or the similar dose which deceives La Gioconda's vengeful husband into thinking she is dead. There is nothing supernatural about either. Both are plain narcotics. Still, there is deception involved, for neither is what it appears and only in Ponchielli's opera is the result what its deviser meant. Straight sleeping draughts that are intended only to be just that are perhaps hardly potions either, but they too have operatic status: Jenûfa is given one by her stepmother, the Kostelníčka, while the old woman interviews her daughter's faithless lover, and "Harlequin" gives "Columbine" a sleeping potion for her husband so they can deceive him together, before theater turns into tragic reality on the stage-within-a-stage of Pagliacci. And then there is Donizetti's delicious one-acter, Il Campanello di Notte, where one older English translation included the immortal couplet: "I'll administer a posset/To keep him in the closet."

The list of genuine operatic potions in the good old supernatural-effect sense is actually quite small: apart from the potion in Tristan und Isolde, there is another Wagner instance in the drink Siegfried takes from Hagen in Götterdämmerung. It has the opposite of the Tristan-effect: it makes him forget his undying love for Brünnhilde. Richard Strauss's late Die Ägyptische Helena twists the scheme further: in it, Menelaus orders the sorceress Aithra to provide a deadly poison for his unfaithful wife Helen, but the concoction makes him forgive her instead. The reverse was Rimsky-Korsakov's choice in The Tsar's Bride. There the love potion ordered turns out in fact to be deadly poison.

Which brings us to poisons, of which opera has perhaps more than its fair share. In Luisa Miller the mischanced lovers take poison together to end it all; there is poisoned wine in Donizetti's Lucrezia Borgia;

L'ELISIR D'AMORE SYNOPSIS

ACT I

Giannetta and a group of peasants are finishing their morning harvesting before resting for lunch under the shade of a group of trees. Nemorino watches Adina timidly from a distance, sad about being too poor to offer her anything but his love and thus too shy to approach her. Adina reads the story of Tristan and Isolde and how Tristan won Isolde's affection with a love potion. The swaggering Sergeant Belcore arrives with a regiment of soldiers. He flirts with the girls and then declares his passion for Adina, asking her to marry him. She is flattered by his handsome bearing and the declaration of his love, but refuses the offer. The peasants return to work, and Nemorino finds the courage to declare his love for Adina. She laughs at him, telling him she is too capricious to settle down. The scene shifts to the square of the neighboring village. Dr. Dulcamara arrives with a supply of patent medicine for sale. Nemorino asks him if he knows of the magic elixir of love with which Tristan won Isolde. Dulcamara replies that it was he who created it. The quack sells his elixir, which is actually a bottle filled with Bordeaux wine, to Nemorino as a love potion. The effect of the alcohol is immediate. Certain that he will win Adina's love, Nemorino begins to treat her indifferently. To get even, Adina begins to flirt with Belcore and finally agrees to marry him. When orders arrive calling for Belcore to report to duty at once, it is decided that Adina and Belcore will wed that very evening.

ACT II

Distracted that Nemorino has not attended the party preceding her marriage, Adina puts off signing the marriage contract. All depart leaving Dulcamara alone. Soon, Nemorino enters and asks the doctor's help. He says Nemorino must double the amount of potion and gives him another bottle of wine. In order to gain the money to pay for the elixir, Nemorino joins Belcore's regiment and receives an enlistment bonus. The scene shifts back to the village square. Nemorino reels in, tipsy from the new bottle of wine. The village girls, having just learned that a rich uncle of Nemorino's has died and made him wealthy, crowd around him. Unaware of his new wealth, Nemorino thinks that at last Dulcamara's potion is working. Adina sees Nemorino with the girls and becomes jealous. She is now determined to win him for herself. Nemorino returns, sad at the thought of leaving his village and Adina for the army. Adina joins him and tells him that she has bought back his enlistment papers so that they can be married. All join in praising Dulcamara and his magic elixir.

in Il Trovatore, Leonora escapes a fate worse than death by finding death itself through the poison secreted in her ring; Adolar in Weber's Euryanthe has died by a similar means before the opera starts; Simon Boccanegra takes poison in a glass of water; Abigail dies from poison, off-stage it is true, at the end of Nabucco; and Medée in Charpentier's opera uses poison, though Cherubini in his version preferred to keep to the classical poisoned garment. There is a poisoned chalice in Verdi's Attila but it never gets drunk. I've no doubt there are many more but I can't think of them at the moment and that's enough anyway.

Poison aside, some other operatic brews turn out completely ineffective. For Treemonisha, simple truth confounds the spurious potion brewed by Zdzetrick. The witches' cauldron in Verdi's Macbeth contains the familiar horrid ingredients but nobody drinks from it. In The Tales of Hoffmann Dr. Miracle's potions, devised to bring an end to Antonia, are not what kills her: with good operatic satire it is singing, too much singing, that claims her spirit. We allowed Oberon's magic herb a place in the potion-canon so one should at least mention the herbs in Ballo in Maschera which Amelia hopes to collect from under the gallows. Their magic powers are never given a chance: she is interrupted before she can pick them. But her purpose is the opposite of Nemorino's: the herbs would cure her of a disastrous love. Another curing mixture, rarely this time from the baroque era, appears in Handel's Orlando in a potion brought back from the moon to set aside Orlando's madness.

True elixirs are surely potions but not all potions, as we have seen, are elixirs. One that certainly is, surely the ultimate operatic elixir of life, has been taken long before the opera it stars in begins: Janáček's Makropulos Case, where EM must reinvent herself after each normal lifespan, though always with the same initials. True to our century's post-Freudian disillusionment she finds no comfort in her longevity. An even less inspiring potion, would-be source of immortality, is to be found in Ginastera's Bomarzo, one of the few successful serial operas. It combines, among other intrepid elements, aloes, gentian, cinchona, calumba, saffron, rhubarb, angelica, myrrh, camomile and peppermint oil, and has quite the undesired if unsurprising effect: it gives the hunchback Duke a bad stomach ache and a not very quick death.

Bomarzo's indigestible mixture is much less scary than some other operatic recipes, and less frightful still than historical truth. Paisiello, the composer of the immensely successful Barbiere di Siviglia which held the stage for 35 years until impertinent young Rossini dared to challenge it, included a love potion in one of his works made up of ground eel, bitter almonds, goat's urine and ale. The reality from history is worse: the doctors of eighteenth-century London, provided nostrums (especially "confects for impotency" and "liquors for the pox") combining crushed toads, salt of vipers, ground garden snails "bruised to a perfect paste," pulvis humani cranum (powdered human skull), "volatile salt of millipedes," sal vitrioli (hydrochloric acid), and copious amount of alcohol (Madeira was favored), rhubarb, and that luckily easily available substance acqua pluvialis (rain water). This doesn't differ so much from the recommendations of the younger Pliny in the first century of our era whose recipes included the right lobe of a vulture's lung, and a lizard drowned in urine. Powdered roast mouse was good for incontinence, cow dung fried in butter for a sore breast, peacock droppings with black snails for consumption, and these were by far not the worst. There were patent elixirs everywhere. And above all for venereal disease. Most included calomel, antimony, steel or mercury. There was nothing to choose between the medications for scrofula or syphilis and those sold as aphrodisiacs. The quacks of the time, whether the time was Pliny's or Donizetti's, knew almost nothing of scientific medicine as we think of it (though Viagra bids fair to mythic status). Nor did their customers. So Dr. Dulcamara, if he seems comic to us now, was a threatening figure as well as a comic caricature. Donizetti knew it was better to make people laugh at the fears and miseries they could do nothing about, as great comedians have always known. And there is sadness behind his elegance, the seriousness that lies at the root of all great comedy. It is the more sad to recall that a decade after composing Elisir he died of the crazed effects of cranio-spinal syphilis, for which no potion from any doctor or itinerant quack could do a thing. □

Christopher Hunt, who is now living in London, was until recently General Director of the Alte Oper in Frankfurt am Main, Germany.

Valenti International

Today's Eligible, Single, Successful Men and Women Turn to America's Top Matchmaking Specialist for the Most Important Decision of Their Lives

Those who seek to achieve results in today's rapidly accelerating society understand the need to take immediate action and appropriate measures to get what they want out of life.

Never before has there been more emphasis on healthy relationships, family togetherness, and emotional well-being as the necessary foundation leading to a road of lifelong success. Yet with time as our most precious and limited resource, it has become increasingly difficult for high achievers to balance their life's work, cultural and academic activities, and the time available to invest with loved ones.

With this in mind, it is easy to see and understand why today's most intelligent and successful individuals in search of their life partner are taking more care and precaution when it comes to choosing their mate.

For years we have seen the appearance of practically every fathomable method of pairing individuals and individuals pairing themselves from well-meaning friends and family to single parties to the internet superhighway. Undoubtedly however, if you are an attractive, successful, relatively private, selective or persnickety individual, you have found that the more you have to offer the more difficult it seems to find the person who is right for you.

Discerning people today want more out of their lives and their relationships. There is clearly a special focus when it comes to the selection process for finding a potential romantic companion. Most people recognize the value of engaging an expert to assist them in their personal search. The question is, "How do you find an expert you can trust?"

Valenti International of Rancho Santa Fe, California is the only company of its kind who consistently attracts and produces results for a select worldwide clientele of quality individuals in their quest for a suitable and compatible life partner. Irene Valenti, President and founder, is personally involved in every aspect of the business.

She truly understands what today's most exceptional individuals must endure in order to find a compatible life partner.

With a staff of Ph.D. Psychologists, and an experienced team of professionals, Irene Valenti is able to meet with and get to know her clients personally while working with her staff to create a solid foundation for providing the best recommendations to her clients for potential marriage partners.

Irene Valenti, President

"The only risk with regard to retaining my services is the risk of drastically increasing your options and actually meeting the right person" Valenti states.

Valenti International takes into consideration social and economic backgrounds, family values and interests as well as personalities and other individual considerations necessary for a successful match. The term, "Matchmaking in the European Tradition" represents an established professional process carefully structured to promote the best results for each client of Valenti International. There are no impersonal methods or computers used for making or selecting introductions. "Each personal introduction or recommendation is made on a comfortable and selective, one to one basis. My clients achieve success without feeling that their time is taken for granted," says Irene Valenti.

What started as one woman's quest to make a difference in people's lives has grown into a world renowned company, a family legacy, and a powerful model for building successful relationships through effective introductions. "I am always impressed with the quality of people my service attracts" says Valenti, who continues to position her reputable company through service excellence and quality advertising. "There is nothing more satisfying to me than to see my clients achieve the happiness they deserve."

Valenti International is the only business of its kind to consistently attract and produce results for a select worldwide clientele. These clients range from the comfortable to the extremely wealthy, embracing all ages and a variety of backgrounds and cultures. If you or someone you know would like to find that special someone, contact Valenti International at (800) 200-8253 or (858) 759-9239 or visit our website at <http://www.valenti.org>. # THE TRIPLE CIRCLES

GIFTS OF $100,000 OR MORE OVER A THREE-YEAR PERIOD

The Triple Circles recognize individuals who pledge $100,000 or more to San Francisco Opera over a three-year period. The extraordinary philanthropic commitment of Triple Circle members is an essential help in planning for the future while ensuring the current financial stability of San Francisco Opera. The Triple Circle members listed below have made past gifts or future commitment for three consecutive performance years between 1998 and 2002. Donors' performance year giving levels, which often include performance sponsorships or other special opportunities, are reflected in the Medallion Society listings. For further information about multi-year commitments to the Opera, please telephone (415) 565-6446.

BEL CANTO SOCIETY

San Francisco Opera gratefully recognizes Bel Canto Society members, loyal patrons who have included San Francisco Opera Association, Merola Opera Program, or San Francisco Opera Guild in their estate plans. Estate planning gifts ensure the company's financial stability and allow for the long-range planning of new productions and new works. We invite you to play a vital role in the Opera's future by adding your name to the Bel Canto Society roster. There are many ways to support San Francisco Opera through your plans, each offering financial benefits to you and your estate. For more information, please call the Planned Giving Office at (415) 565-6446.

DOUBLE YOUR SUPPORT WITH MATCHING GIFTS

DID YOU KNOW YOUR GIFT MAY BE DOUBLED OR EVEN TRIPLED FOR THE 2000/2001 SEASON?

If your company is one of over 450 that matches gifts to the performing arts, your gift to San Francisco Opera may be matched 100% or more.

Matching gifts are a great way to increase your contributions, receive additional benefits, and help us maintain the best in opera. For example, this season, if you donate $500, with your company match you will enjoy benefits at the $1000 level which include an invitation to a piano dress rehearsal.

Corporations sponsor matching gift programs so their employees and retirees can help direct corporate philanthropic investments.

If your company has a matching gift program, simply complete the matching gift form available through your personnel office and send it to us at:
